The Forest Republican.

18 PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY, BY J. H. WEINE DEFICE IN BOBINSON & BONNER'S BUILDING

ELM STREET, TIONESTA, PA.

TERMS, $1.50 A YEAR.

No Subscriptions received for a shorter period than three months.

Correspondence solicited from all parts of the country. No notice will be taken of anonymous communications.

The Forest Republican.

VOL. XIII. NO. 27.

TIONESTA, PA., SEPT. 22, 1880.

$1.50 Per Annum.

One Square (1 inch,) one insertion - $1 one month - - 3 00 three months - 6 00

Rates of Advertising.

one year - - 10 (6 ear - - - 15 'g - - - 30 (0 Two Squares, one year -Quarter Col. "Half" "

Legal notices at established rates. Marriage and death notices, gratis, All bills for yearly advertisements excleted quarterly. Temporary advertisements must be paid for in advance.

Job work. Cash on Delivery.

The Sensons.

Spring, brilliant season of the year, We think, for divers reasons, That thou art, taken as the whole, The spice of all the seasons.

Summer, thou warmest of the time, That comes with sun and shower, No man can doubt an instant that Thou art the pepper of the hour.

Autumn, sweet evening of the year, Rich fruits and grain adorn thy brow And in thy plenteous harvest gitts The salt of time art thou.

Winter, stern, and cold, and chill, Thouseomest biting, bleak and drear, And as we shun thy biting breath We name thee vinegar of the year. -Steubenville Herald.

WILD GRAPES.

"Such a quantity of them," said the Widow Winton, "and doing nobody any good!" The golden September sunshine was steeping all the uplands in yellow brightness; the avant couriers of the coming little at this. frost had touched the maples and sumaes with fiery red, and the wild grapes in the woods came freighting the air with the grapes, we can get them all gathered sweetness. Such wild grapes, too-great, blooming masses of purple, out-lined against their rank, green leaves, as if some enchanted hand had hung all the forest aisles with glistening pendants of "The jelly they would make!" said the Widow Winton, shading her large black eyes with one band, as she looked up where the vines had garlanded a copse of cedar trees. "And the preserves!

And the price they would bring in market! I really do think that when I rented the Glen Cottage, I ought to have land the privilege of these woods into the bargain, more especially as Mr. Esselment is in Europe, and the grapes are doing nobody any good."

And the Widow Winton drew a deep s'gh, as the wind wafted a fresh gust of hagrance toward her-the sweet, indescribable aroms of ripening grapes in

The Widow Winton, be it understood, was no angular matron or wrickled old beldame, but a resy little personage of two or three-and-twenty, with taughing, sloc-black eyes, long-lashed and almond-shaped, a saucy, retrousse nose, and lips like a cleft rose bud. And as she stood there, with her dimpled hands interlaced above her eyes, a rebellious resolution formed itself in her heart,

I will have them," said the Widow Winton; "as well me as the schoolboys and the sparrows. And if I were to ask that crusty old agent, I know he'd refuse, so I shall omit the little ceremony. I'll send 'em into town, and I'll take the money to get me a new fall hat, for mine has been positively shabby ever since the crape got soaked through in that summer shower, three weeks ago Sun-

And the Widow Winton went home to the little cottage on the edge of the wood, which had once been a porter's lodge to the Esselmont estate, and told her sister what she had determined

"Fanny," said Miss Charity Hall, who was ten years older than the widow, and a good many degrees graver, " pray don't think of such a thing.

"Why not?" said Fanny. "It would be stealing!"
"No, it wouldn't," stoutly argued anny. "There they hang, doing nobody any good; and it's a wicked, sin-And Mr. Esselment is in ful shame! Paris, and that cross old crab of an agent sets up a cry if one does but break off a sprig of autumn leaves. No, Charity, there's no use arguing; the grapes I want, and the grapes I'll have!"

"I wouldn't," said Miss Charity.
"I would," said the Widow Winton. And she took down a little wicker-basket, with a twisted handle and a double lid, and tripped off. How are you going to reach them?

said Miss Charity.
"I shall climb," said the widow.

"You?" cried Miss Charity. "Yes, I! nodded the widow.

But she was yet engaged in gathering the purple spoils that hung, ripe and tempting, within her reach, when there was a crackling of dry leaves under foot, and a tall young man, in a suit of dark-colored cloth and a Tyrolese hat, stepped lightly into the forest glade.
"It's the new rector," said the Widow Winton to herself. "To think that he should have blundered along at this very time of all others! But I may as well make the best of it."

And she turned around to greet the bewildered new-comer with a sweet smile and the utmost self-possession. Will you have some grapes?" said she, holding out the twisted wicker "I-I beg your pardon!" stammered the stranger; "but I must have mis-taken my way. I supposed these were the Esselmont woods. So they are," said the widow, "and I am stealing the Esselment grapes-because, you see, I've rented the little cottage yonder, and I really think the grapes ought to go with the cottagedon't you?" Widow Winton had perceived by this time that he was tall and straight, with pleasant hazel eyes and a long, silky mustache. "I know sollittle about the property here—" Oh, of course not!" said the widow, sitting down on a fallen tree, with her little black silk apron full of grapes. "But I can tell you. Mr. Esselmont, who owns the property, is in Europe; and the agent is such a cross old fudge that one can't ask for so much as a bunch of wild flowers-a regular crab, you know !' opening her bright eyes very wide to mossy log, beside the widow, and was cating grapes as if it were the most natural thing in the world. So I just concluded to help myself," said the widow. "So I perceive," said the hero of the silky mustache. "Wouldn't you, if you were in my

"Wouldn't you, if you were in my place?" said the widow.
"Certainly I would!" said the gentleman. "And if you will allow me, I will help you to help yourself."
"But you haven't time," said the Widow Winton, dubiously.
"Oh, yes, I have!" said the stranger—"plenty of time, I assure you. I was only crossing the woods to call on the new rector, and—"
The purple clusters of granes slid to

The purple clusters of grapes slid to the ground, as the Widow Winton started up in amazement and dismay.
"Oh, dear!" cried she; "I thought you were the new rector!" The stranger laughed.

"Do I look so very clerical?" said he. "Then you are the agent's son from Canada!" said she. "Oh, dear! oh, dear! And I've been calling your lather a crab, and all sorts of names. Oh, dear! I beg your pardon, I am sure, but all the came he is a crab!" "Pray don't distress yourself," soothed the stranger. "I am no rela-tion at all to Mr. Esselmont's agent."

The Widow Winton brightened up "I am thankful for that," said she before the agent comes this way on his afternoon walk. Can you climb?"

"I should rather think I could," promptly answered the gentleman.

The widow clapped her plump little hands in delight, as the huge bunches rained down into her apron.
"There," cried she, "that's enough!

"Are you quite sure?"
"Oh, quite," said the widow—"for jelly, and marmalade, and to send a lot to town to buy my new bonnet-strings. The stranger sprang lightly to the ground, from the boughs of a stately beech tree.

"Then it's all right," said i.e. "And we've outgeneraled Mr. Esselmont and his cross old agent, after all."
"Haven't we?" said the Widow

Winton, with her black eyes all dancing with mischief. "And now, if you'll come home with me, I'll give you a cup of real French chocolate, and a slice of

"I shall be very happy to carry your basket for you," said the stranger, cour-

"There he is now," said the widow, recoiling a little, as they neared the tiny cottage, with its drooping caves and pillared veranda.

"Who?" said the gentleman. "The agent," said the Widow Win-

He can't hurt us," said the stranger. And he walked boldly into the very presence of Mr. Sandy Macpherson, with the basket of plundered grapes on his arm; while the widow followed, nuch marveling at his valor.

But, instead of bursting out into invective, the agent sprang to his feet, and began bowing and scraping most obsequiously. "Really, sir-really, Mr. Esselmont said he, "this is a pleasure that I didn't expect."

"Mr.—Esselmont!" cried out the widow. "I beg a thousand pardons for not disclosing my identity before!" said the handsome "Incognito." "But you've no idea how I have enjoyed this mas-querade. Will you allow me to in-troduce myself formally at last?" The Widow Winton turned crimson and pale. "But I've been stealing your grapes, said she. "Every fruit and flower on the Essel mont estates is at your service," said the young heir, with a bow and a smile But when he went away, Miss Charity took her younger sister formally

"Fanny," said she, "aren't you ashamed?" Not a bit," said Fanny, valiantly. "Stealing fruit like a schoolboy, and romping like a child," remonstrated Charity.

"If Mr. Esselmont don't mind it," said the widow, "why should I? And we're going to the haunted springs towe're going to the haunted springs toglen. Oh, I can tell you, Charity, it's great fun!"

But, as time crept on, Miss Charity Hall grew more uneasy still. "Fanny," said she, "you must leave "Fanny," said she, "you mus off flirting with Guy Esselmont!" "Why?" said the widow.

"Because you are poor and he is rich; and people are beginning to talk."
"Let 'em talk," said Fanny.

are to be married next month, and then we can set the whole world at defiance; and, Charity—" hiding her face on the elder sister's shoulder.

"He say he fell in love with me that day he caught me stealing his grapes!"
"Humph!" said Miss Charity.
"Well, you've stolen his heart, so I don't see but that you're quits!"

Living in New York, 1794.

The Tontine house, under the care of Mr. Hyde, is the best hotel in New York. He sets from twelve to sixteen dishes every day. He charges for a year's board, without liquor, $350 to $400. Butter in the market is 374 cents per pound; beef, compared with the English beet, is poor; turkeys are 624 cents each; common fowls are 25 cents each. Of Albany beef," sturgeon, you can get mough for 124 cents to feed a family. Oysters are plenty and large. Peaches sell two cents for three to six of them. All ranks of people smoke cigars six or seven inches long. Silver money is plenty, but gold is rarely seen. The population of the city is about 30,000. There are two places of public entertainment in the environs of the city that are much visited in the summer: one is called Belvidere (on Bunker's hill), and "How very disagreeable!" said the the other Bundling's gardens. - Magazine stranger, who had taken a seat on the of American History.

A Japanese |Fable.

Once upon a time, on the shady side of a hill near the seashore, there lived a crab. One day he found some boiled rice, and set off home with it; but on his way was spied by a monkey. The monkey offered to exchange the seed of a persimmon, the fruit of which he had nearly finished eating, for the rice. This the crab accepted on condition that the monkey had not injured it with his teeth. The exchange made, Jocko devoured the rice, but the crab planted the seed in his garden. A long time afterward, the mankey happening to pass the same spot, was surprised to see a fine tree laden with fruit, and his friend the crab sitting on the balcony of a nice new house, admiring his fruit tree. The monkey being hungry, begged the crab to allow him to eat some of the fruit. But the crab apologized, saying that his friend would be quite wel-come to some of the fruit, but he could not climb to e tree to gather it. The monkey declared ability to climb if the crab would allow him to try; to which the owner of the tree consented, stipulating that he should receive half the fruit that was plucked. So up the mon-key clambered, and as fast as he could, selecting the best and ripest fruit, but was too greedy to notice the crab, who was waiting patiently below. At length the crab, losing patience, accused the monkey of being a bad and deceitful fel-low; upon which the monkey got angry, pelted the poor crab, and broke his shell. The crab's friend, the wasp, coming by, attacked the monkey and stung him so severely that Jocko scampered tway frightened. The wasp then sent for his friends Egg and Mortar, and after due deliberation, they made it up amongst them to punish Jocko. They arranged that Egg should explode if put on the fire, the wasp should sting Jocko, and Mortar, placed on the roof, should roll off upon his head as he ran out of the door. The next day the mon-key being hungry, called at the crab's house to apologize, and to beg another dinner of fruit; but, seeing no person in the house, he entered, and finding a nice large egg on a tray, he put it on the fire to roast it, as he could not manage raw eggs so well as hard cooked ones. Presently the egg exploded violently and scattered the hot cinders over Joeko, who ran into the next room howling with pain; but the wasp flew out of a corner and stung him so badly that he rushed out of the house, frightened and almost mad with pain, when tropped the mortar upon his head and killed him.

Moral: Cunning and greedy people rarely gain much; and ungrateful ones are generally punished in the end.

A Famous Horse-Woman. A Yorkshire (England) authority says that perhaps the most exciting and enthusiastic scene ever witnessed on a race course was at Knavesmire, in 1804, when Mrs. Thornton accepted her brother-in-law, Captain Flint's challenge to ride a race for a wager for "500 guineas and 1,000 guineas bye." The distance was four miles, and Mrs. Thornton to ride her weight against Mr. Flint his weight. A hundred thousand persons flocked to the course, and the Sixth dragoons were called out to aid the constables in keeping order. At the start the betting was "five and six to four on the petticoat," When half the course had been run it rose to seven to four, and at three miles advanced to two to one. During the three miles the lady had been gradually increasing the lead, when in the last mile her girth slackened, and though she cieverly kept her seat she could not maintain her place. It was said that $1,000,000 changed hands. In the following year Mrs. Thornton rode two races-one s match for 2,000 guineas and a bet of 600 guineas with Mr. Bamford, who at the last moment declined to ride, and Mrs. Thornton cantered over the course. The other was with a famous jockey named Buckle. Mrs. Thornton, in pur-ple cap and waistcoat, nankeen shirt, purple shoes and embroidered stockings, took the lead and kept it for some distance, but was passed by Buckle, who maintained his position for a few length, "when," to quote a chronicler, the lady, by the most excellent horsemanship, pushed forward and came in in a style superior to anything of the kind we ever witnessed, gaining the race by half a neck." The Cologue Cathedral. The Cologne (Germany) cathedral, begun about 1250, was finished August, 1880, when the last stone was inserted in the finial of the second tower. It is 511 feet long and 231 broad, and its twin towers are 511 feet high. It originated when the religious enthusiasm of the Roman Catholic church was at its height and enormous edifices were required for the masses who thronged the altar. Up to 1830 it remained in the same state as in the middle ages, only the great chair and a portion of the towers having been built, the entire main part of the structure-the nave, transcpt and the aislesnot having been begun. The original plans were found, however, in the dusty archives of the cathedral, giving every detail of its construction, so that the work could be carried on exactly as at first intended. In 1830 there was a great enthusiasm for the monuments of the past throughout Germany, and the work of completing the pile was taken hold of with energy under King William Frederick III., of Prussia. It has been pushed forward rapidly and as much has been done in the past fifty years as could have been done in centuries of the middis ages. The greater part of the building is really of modern construction. One of the towers contains the famous kaiser glocke (emperor's bell) presented by Emperor William in thanksgiving for the victory over France. The work has been done by large government appropriations, private subscription, and the Cologne Cathedral building society, with frequent drawings of a grand lot-The nave, aisles and the transept were consecrated in 1848, and the whole interior was thrown open in

The United States and Europe. We number now nearly or quite 50;-000,000 people. A hundred million could be sustained without increasing the area of a single farm or adding one to their number by merely bringing our product up to the average andard of reasonably good agriculture; and then there might remain for export twice the quantity we now send abroad to feed the hungry in foreign lands. No longer divided by the curse of slavery, this nation is now united by bonds of mutual interest, of common speech, tied by the iron band of 85,000 miles of railway, and is yet only beginning to feel the vital power and grandeur of truly national existence. What may be the future of this land few can yet conceive. Texas alone comprises as much territory as the German empire, England and Wales combined. Texas has now about 2,000,000 people within her boundaries; the German empire, England and Wales about 67,-000,000. The good land in Texas is equal in area to the good land in Germany and Great Britain. Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa combined more than equal France in area and possess more fertile land. Only twenty-five years ago John Brown and his companions redeemed Kansas from slavery. Ne-braska was then indicated on our own maps as a part of "the great American desert." and Iowa had scarcely become a State. Their population may now be 2,500,000. France has 47,000,000. The great middle section of Eastern Tennessee, Northern Georgia, Western Carolina and Southern Virginia has been hemmed in by the curse of slavery, and is yet almost a terra incognita, but it is replete with wealth in minerals, in timber and in fertile valleys of almost unequal climate for health and vigor. This section is almost equal to the Austrian empire in its area, and more than equal in resources. It has a sparse population of only one or two millions. The Austrian empire has over 37,000,000. The healthy upland country of Georgia, Alabama and the Carolinas contains vast area of fertile woodland, which can be bought by the hundred thousand acres at half a dollar or twenty-five cents an acre, on which sheep and cotton thrive equally well. These sections are being slowly occupied by white farmers, and wait for immigrants who can bring them to use. In a few short years, sheep, fed mainly upon the kernel of the cotton-seed, and upon the grasses that follow the cotton, will send to market from the same fields, alternately occupied, as much wool as cotton. This warm section is more than equal to Italy in area; it has perhaps 2,000,000 people. Italy contains 27,000,000. The fertile lands of the Shenandoal valley in Virginia, and along the Potomac in Maryland, more than equal Belgium. They may contain half a mil-tion people. Belgium has more than five million. In the consideration of this problem of productive capacity there are other factors of the greatest importance. What are the burdens to be borne by our people compared to

Old Things.

Do you know, anyhow, I don't fee much reverence for old things that are simply old? I suppose it is heathenish others? What is the mortgage on this land that we possess .- E. A. Atkinson, in Fortnightly Review.

and awfully boorish, but I can't help it A man shows me a teapot or a toothbrush and tells me his grandmother used them fifty-six years and that was one hundred and sixty-two years ago. can't uncover my head, and go down be fore the venerable relic on my bended knees, in a spirit of veneration. I feel more like telling him it was time the old girl got new ones. Family relics, like family babies have no sort of interest for any outside of the family. Here, the other day a man bought an old spinning wheel. "One hundred and twelve years old," he told me, proudly, and he was going to take it home, and set it up in his ibrary and never part with it. And for the life of me, I couldn't see why. It had no interest in the world for him beyond its age. He might have gone out into the street and picked up a boulder two thousand years old with just as much local and historical interest for him as the spinning wheel. that the former owner of the spinning wheel should sell it for money, that did surprise me. It had a world of memo-ries for him. He could touch the treadle and the whirring wheel would croon out the same old monotone that had droned its drowsy accompaniment to the cradle songs that had nushed him to sleep in his baby days; t would sing to him in his manhood and in the long evenings of his old age, of a white-haired "grandma" and mother with patient face and beautiful eyes: it would sing of a thousand oldtime memories and forgotten faces; it would repeat snatches of old songs, and old forgotten tender words for him; it would sing how the tender mother's face grew patient and sad and careworn as the years went on, and the beautiful eyes were faded with tears and dimmed with watching and the loving hand fainted with weariness until at 'ast one day the wairring wheel stood still, and its silence spread a great heavy quiet all over the old home, only broken now and then by low, soft breathing whis-pers and the sobbing of motherless children in the little rooms; by and by the tremulous voice of the white-haired pastor, and then homely voices singing some grand old hymns of the deathless faith that mother died in, the suffling feet of the bearers, and then nothing in the darkened room but a creeping ray of sunshine falling in through the blind and a quiet so deep that the hum of the bees in the old-fashioned vines trailing about the window had a strangely plaintive sound. How the man whose grandmother and mother sat at that busy wheel, could sell it, I cannot un-derstand. But what it could be to the man who bought it, is fully as great a mystery. IIt will sing none of those songs to him. It would be like a man talking Bengalee to a Spanish parrot .-

FIGURES FOR THE FAMILY.

How Mr. Spoopendyke Audited the Accounts of His Wife,

"Now, my dear," said Mr. Spoopendyke, "if you'll bring me the pen and ink, I'll look over your accounts and straighten 'em out for you. I think your idea of keeping an account of the daily expenses is the beauthing you ever did. It's business like, and I want to enourage you in it."

"Here's the ink," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, growing radiant at the compliment. "I had the pen day before yesterday. Let me think," and she dove into her work basket and then glanced nervously under the bureau.

"Well, do you suppose I'm going to "Well, do you suppose I'm going to split up my fingure and write with that?" demanded Mr. Spoopendyke. "Where's the pen? I want the pen."

"I put it somewhere," said Mrs. Spoopendyke. "Ah! here I have it. Now you see," she continued, "I put what money I spend down here. This is your account here and this is the is your account here and this is the joint account. You know—"
"What's this?" asked Mr. Spoonpen-

'That's your account; this-" "No, no, I mean this marine sketch in the second line.

"That? Oh, that's a 7."
"S'pose I ever spent seven dollars with a tail like to it? If you're going to make figures, why don't you make figures. What d'ye want to make a picture of a prize fight in a column of accounts for? What is this elephant doing here?"

"I think that's a 2," replied Mrs. Spoopendyke, dubiously. "Maybe it's a 4. I can tell by adding it up."
"What are you going to add up? D'ye count in this corner lot and that rose bush and this pair of suspenders? D'ye add them in?"

"That's a 6 and that is a 5 and the last is an 8. They come out all right, and during the last month you have spent more than I and the joint account together." 'Haven't either. When did I spend this broken-down gunboat?" 'That ain't a boat. Il's $42 for your "Well, this tramp fishing off a rock, when did I spend him?"

"It ain't a tramp. It's $50 cash you took, and I don't know what you spent it for. Look at my account, now—"
"What's the man pulling a gig for?"
"It's nothing of the sort, That ain't a gig, it's $1 for wiggin. You see I've a gig, it's $1 for wiggin. You see I've only spent $22 in a month, and you've spent $184."

"You can't tell by this what I've done," growled Mr. Spoopendyke.
"What's this rat trap doing in the joint account?"

"That's fourteen cents for fruit, when

"And this measly-looking old hen, what's she got to do with it?"
"That's no hen. That's a 2. It means $2 for having your chair mended.

"What have you charged me with this old graveyard for?" "That's fiftten cents for sleeve elasties. The 15 ain't plain, but that's what

' How do you make out I have spent so much? Where's the vouchers? Show me the vouchers? "I don't know what you mean," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, "but you spent all

I put down."
"Haven't done anything of the sort Show me some vouchers. Your account's a humbug. You don't know how to keep an account "Yes, I do," pleaded Mrs. Spoopen dyke, "and I think it's all right."

"No you don't. What do you mean by getting up engravings of a second hand furniture store and claiming that it's my account? You're a great book keeper, you are. All you want is a sign hung between you and the other side of the street, to be a commercial college. If I ever fail in business, I'm going to fill you up with benches and start a night school. Give me that pen," and Mr. Spoopendyke commenced running up the columns. "Two two's four and eight twelve and four sixteen and carry one to the next and three is four. Here, this is wrong. You've got an eighteen for a twenty here."

Eh? 'jerked out Mrs. Spoopendyke. "This is $204 not $184. I knew you couldn't keep accounts. You can't even

"That makes your account even bigger," responded Mrs. Spoopendyke. I didn't think it was so much." Slam went the book across the room followed by the pen, and the ink would have gone too, but Mrs. Spoopendyke cautiously placed it out of harm's way. "Dod gast it!" howled Mr. Spoopendyke, as he tore of his clothes and prepared for bed. "You ain't fit to have a pen and ink. Next time I want my accounts kept I'll keep 'em chained up in the yard, and don't you go near 'em;

"Yes, dear," sighed Mrs Spoopen-dyke, as she slipped the obnoxious book into the drawer.—Brooklyn Eag'e.

Words of Wisdom.

Prefer loss before unjust gain, for that brings grief but once, and this for-

The modern majesty consists in work. What a man can do is his greatest ornament, and he always consults his dignity by doing it.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible. Vice is infamous, though in a prince; and virtue honorable, though in a peasant.

Where a man makes his money there he should make his home, and, as a rule, it will mainly be his fault and that of his family if he cannot spend his iffe there with profit and satisfaction,

Without earnestness no man is ever great or does really great things. He may be the cleverest man; he may brilliant, entertaining, popular, but he its depths a shadow.

Cai Bono :

What is hope? A smiting rainbow Children tollow through the wet; 'Tis not here, still yonder, yonder; Never urehin found it yet.

What is life? A thawing iceberg On a sea with sunny shore;-Gay, we sail; it melts beneath us; We are sunk, and seen no more.

What is man? A foolish baby, Vainly strives, and fights, and frets; Demanding all; deserving nothing;-One small grave is all he gets. -Thomas Carlyle.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Early to bed and early to rise is a very good plan to escape being interviewed

It ain't what goes in, but what goes out of the inkstand that makes the trouble -Boston Transcript.

"Mine, miner, minus!" This is the general upshot of speculation in mining stock. -Paterson Press. From 1874 to 1880 Chicago had 139 murders, twenty-two of them occurring on July days and only seven in Febru-

It is said that a woman's voice can be heard for two miles by a man in a balloon. That may be the reason why so few men go up in ballons. - Peck's

A Commercial Travelers' Car com-pany will be organized in Detroit to build cars with restaurant and sleeping accommodations, and spacious compartments for the display of samples.

A man near Houston, Texas, made $600 per acre this year from the cultiva-tion of domestic blackberries. The yield was 3,000 quarts per acre, which sold at twenty cents a quart.

A man condemned to four years' imprisonment at Casano, Italy, starved himself to death. From the day of his sentence he refused to take food, and no compulsion being resorted to he died at the end of thirty days.

A South American plant has been found that cures bashfulness. It should be promptly tried by the man who leaves the hotel by the back window because he is too diffident to say goodbye to the cashier and clerk.

The tickets of admission to ancient circuses and other exhibitions were frequently little "squeezes" of baked clay, the material having been pressed into molus bearing effigies appropriate to the different tiers of seats in an amphitheater, or having reference to the town or city. For example, an elephant stood for one place or tier, an eagle for another. "Are seeds of the future lying under the leaves of the past?" is the very pertinent inquiry of a knowledge-seeker. They may be; or it's barely possible that the seeds of the past are lying under the leaves of the future; or the leaves of the future may be lying under the seeds of the past; or the seeds of the leaves may be lying under the future of the past-at any rate something is lying, and if you expect to get through a heated political campaign like this without it, there's where you dispose of yourelf. - Marathon Independent.

The Fire Laws of Japan.

The severity with which persons in Japan are punished who have the misfortune to be burned out is stated as folows by the Scientific American: If the house is occupied and is accidentally set on fire, the person through whose car lessness the fire is started receives ten days' imprisonment with hard labor; if it is inhabited and the fire be produced by the proprietor, then he is punished with twenty days; if the fire spreads to other houses, the sentence is forty days, and when anybody is killed thereby, one degree heavier; but if the person killed is a relative of the first degree, the punishment is one hundred days; if the house belongs to the government, one hundred days; if a temple, from sixty days to one year, but ten years are inflicted if it happens to be one of the great temples of Isle, or in the precincts of the imperial palace. If a robber sets fire unintentionally to a house, he is punished with at least three years imprisnment with hard Decapitation awaits incendiaries, ten years renal servitude an attempt at arson, the punishment being mitigated if the would-be incendiary is a servant who has just received a sharp rebuke, or if the attempt be made on an uninhabited dwelling. If a man sets fire to his own house, ninety days, but if the fire spreads to houses in the neighborhood, two years and a half; and penal servitude for life is inflicted if the offender profits by the opportunity of fire to purloin goods or property.

Robin Red Breast.

The English robin, after whom our robin is named, has some very pleasant traits of character. For one thing, he is tender-hearted, and is often known to feed and comfort suffering birds, whether they are of his own kind or not. Stories are told of homesick birds shut up in cages being visited by robins and cheered up by social chattering, and also of their being supplied by the same generous little creatures with worms and other nice morsels of food. Young birds which fall out of the nest before they can fly seem to be the special care of the robins. They will feed and care for them, and at last teach them to fly, and fly away with the grateful young-sters. The bird we call a robin, though he is quite as interesting as the English rabin, and has his own pleasant, lively ways, has really no right to the name, being in fact a thrush. Whatever we call him, he is a bright, intelligent fellow, and nothing can be funnier than to will want weight. No soul-moving see him jerk a worm out of the ground picture was ever painted that had not in for his breakfast.—New Jerusalem Mes-BC GCF.