Barnett Bubbles. There is not much in the way of news to communicate from our locality at present. The raspberry has vanished, the huckleberry is coming, and by and by the blackberry will color the page of our industrial record.

Surveyor Caldwell and his corps have been trying to locate a railroad route from Brookville to Sheffield by way of Clarington and Marica.

Texter has five boats turned off, and expects, or at least wants to, to turn off for some time at the rate of two a week.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams from Michigan, are at Mr. Butterfield's. Jacob Maze is building a blacksmith shop.

Five of our schools are in operation at present, with an enrollment of 122 pupils. Mr. S. H. Shields, who has been attending the Indiana State Normal School for some time, is with us again.

Barnett has adopted a new series of books; the work of introducing them goes on slowly; The Clarington school has, however, got through with the work and is using the new books exclusively.

Things taught should not be left entirely to those who are legally vested with the power to teach them, or to oversee educational interests—superintendents, directors and teachers.

Old methods have had their day, many of them, and new methods have supplanted them. The true object of the educator is not so much to develop something new, as to prove that he may approve, or disprove that he may disapprove, enabling him to "hold fast that which is good."

There are many methods—many good ones, and some bad ones too no doubt,—but the success of any method depends upon the following circumstances, viz: the understanding of the method by the teacher, the means to employ it, a manifested interest on the part of the teacher, and the adoption of the method to the capacity of the pupil.

How many patrons of the schools of Forest county to-day know by what method their children are taught reading, or anything else? Many do not care if the end—the ability to read—is attained.

It is not to be expected that every teacher is an elocutionist, properly fledged and fully pinioned; but every teacher ought to be able to teach a few of the commonest principles; what is taught should be taught correctly; it is not the time spent on the reading lesson, or the amount read that makes the reader; it is the how of it.

Spelling is and should be made an auxiliary in teaching reading. Every lesson to be studied, or recited orally is an exercise in reading.
