Republican State Convention.

BEDFORD, PA., July 20, 1881.—A convention of the Republican party is hereby called to meet in the hall of the House of Representatives in Harrisburg, on Thursday, the 8th day of September, 1881, at 12 o'clock M., of said day. Delegates, equal to the number of Senators and Representatives, to be chosen in the several districts of the Commonwealth. The convention, when assembled, shall nominate a candidate for the office of State Treasurer, and transact such other legitimate business as may be brought before it. By order of the Republican State Central Committee. JOHN CESSNA, Chairman.

Attest: LUCIUS ROGERS, SAM'L F. BARR, C. MAGEE, JOHN McCULLOUGH, Sec'y's.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

Last Friday was a gloomy day for his nation. All that day the President lay at Death's door, even his faithful physicians giving up in despair. But, thank God, he rallied once more, and since then his condition has been of a much more hopeful character. He has from day to day taken nourishment, and his stomach is once more performing its functions. We have as high authority as Dr. Hamilton for saying that the beloved President will recover. The news this morning, while it is not the most encouraging, is not of a character to cause discouragement. Mr. Garfield holds in his own well and feels better, which affords considerable consolation. The following dispatch from Secretary Blaine to Minister Lowell, London, gives about the best idea of the present status of the case:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Aug. 30, 0:30 p. m.—The President, if not rapidly advancing, is at least holding his own. His fever is less than last night, and his swollen gland steadily improves. His pulse continues rather high, running this evening from 110 to 114. Perhaps the best indication in the case is that the President himself feels better, and his mind being now perfectly clear, he readily compares one day's progress with another. BLAINE, Secretary.

MANY Southern cities are suffering severely for water, the supply of which is deficient by reason of drought and want of proper machinery to raise and supply such cities. In this respect nearly all Southern cities are very defective, and are necessarily in danger of water famine at all times.

EVERY effort is being made to purify the postal service, and with good effect. The practice of sending insulting postal cards through the mails has become very offensive, and the Postmaster General is resolved to break it at all hazards. For this purpose he directs that when a party to whom such postal cards are addressed requests that they be not delivered to him, the postmaster may have them destroyed. This is a very proper arrangement.

NEVER in the history of the world was there such sympathy and heartfelt anxiety as that exhibited for a suffering President. All the months of the civilized world have expressed their feelings and now in the hour of sorest trial, when Death meddled so near, the voice of prayer, so universal in our land, has gone up to the Most High abroad. Sunday the probes of Liverpool all sent their petitions to the Throne of Grace, as many others throughout the United Kingdom. All the Christian people have been and are a unit in their appeals to the Almighty to spare our President's life.—Derrick.

Notes Along the Sea Shore.

Having in my former notes given you a pretty extensive account of the peninsula, and Barnegat Bay itself, which is one of the best fishing places on the Atlantic coast, I propose now to describe fishing there as well as I can from notes taken on the spot. This famous fishing bay averages 2 1/2 miles wide and is about 20 miles long, it is tranquil when compared to the ocean, yet rough when compared to the small lakes of the Middle States. Its depth varies from four to eleven feet, consequently it is safe. The game fish consists of mackerel, sea-trout, weak fish, flounders, sheephead, bluefish, perch, Cape May goodies, seatrass, called also rockfish. Then comes such game as eels, crabs, oysters and clams. Of fish not edible are the toad-fish, flying-fish, which scuds before your sail boat as you go to the fish bank, and the moss-bankers—the last named is the principal food of the game fish. There are some gars, but they are small and not numerous in the bay; they are a good kind of a gar for they seldom annoy the fisherman's hook; from their habit of remaining stationary in the water when not disturbed they are killed by the sea crabs which rise up from the bottom and close right in on them. The said gars, "can't stand the pressure," so they are scarce.

In the bay much of the fishing is done with hook and line; though for blue-fish and mackerel they troll; they use a squid, which is a piece of solder or pewter about 6-inches long, three sided and made very tight, with a large hook soldered into it; the line attached is about 200 feet long for use when fishing in the surf where blue-fish are mostly caught. The end of the squid line is usually made fast to a post or stake on the shore as a matter of precaution, especially in surf fishing. A fish highly prized on the Jersey coast is the sheeps head; for them they fish with a dipsey line, going cut in sneak boats to the reefs when they feed; the bait used for sheeps head is clams.

The sea-trout is an excellent fish—it varies from 14 inches to 2 feet long. The bait for them are shrimps, a small crab caught along the salt marshes on the edge of the bay with a scoop net. They go in schools, like some other species; a line of sail and fish boats, always points out where they are in the bay. The first day I fished for them we had to sail about 7 miles down the bay in our cat boat to the bank, John Frick, two boys and myself composing the party. Having fished an hour we filled a good sized dry goods box, and voted to quit for the day. When you get into a good school of fish the number you catch depends upon the capacity of yourself and boatman to bait—this is the only limit.

One agreeable feature in bay fishing, too, is the fact that you generally get just the kind of fish you go out for, as far as my observation goes, you catch the same sized fish, usually each day. The first day the fish caught were about 14 inches long, and the last catch of fish were almost to a fraction about 20 inches long of the same species. There is little skill required in this kind of fishing.

There is a fascination peculiar to the coast that can never be forgotten; the mind reverts to the sail boats covering the bay, giving it a holiday picnic appearance. Watching the play of the flying fish ahead of the boat, and the various fashioned boats, there is no monotony about it. Then we have an ever-changing scene. On the ocean we behold the mighty vessels plowing through the waves, while on the other hand the little duck-like boats play like corks on the water, or dancing like puppets to the music of the waves. The land is quietness itself compared to it. Looking to the old ocean the far line of the horizon seems to meet the sky and close the line of sight. Again a breeze springs up and we see the white caps floating upon the top of the ever green sea, while the ships moving over the surface present a moving panorama to the eye. S. D. I. Sea Side, N. J., Aug. 10, 1881.

Settle Up. The undersigned would respectfully ask all indebted to him to call and settle by cash or note, on or before Sept. 1st, 1881, otherwise his accounts will be left in the hands of a collector. WM. LAWRENCE. Tionesta, July 26, 1881.

Colorado Letter.

CAMP WHITEKIN, COLO., August 24, 1881. ED. REPUBLICAN:—It being night and tent life rather monotonous I fell to thinking of Old Forest and the many hospitalities I have enjoyed at the hands of my Forest friends, and not being able to write them separately I write you, knowing that it will reach them nearly, if not all.

We are now located on the Bear River, which the Indians call "Yampa," about twenty miles north of the Ute Reservation in Colorado. My Leveller has just completed his elevation and finds we are, here at station 6479, 10,271.41 feet above ocean level. Mountains rear their snow-capped peaks on every side of us. Back of us is a terrible canon nearly two thousand feet deep with sides almost perpendicular. I wish I could represent to you my party going through the canon. The Transimian could find room for only one leg of the tripod on the narrow ledge on which he stood, and succeeded in getting a second into a friendly seam of the rocks; for the third he made use of a piece of rope with which he tied his transmit to a jutting Craig, and succeeded in getting in the line. Your humble servant had to go around a distance of one-fourth mile in order to take a back sight for the transmitman. We were three days running 2175 feet of line, most of which we did by triangulation. If the Tionesta R. R. Company could see some of the places in which the Denver & Rio Grande build roads they would have a double track line from Tionesta to Sheffield in less than three months. On the Denver & Rio Grande R. R. there are grades of 289 feet per mile when equated for curvature. Thirty-five degree curves, forty feet rock through cuts, and bridges hung in canons which are almost 2000 feet deep.

They are now operating 957 miles of railway, crossing the Continental Divide by a turn back curve using up 274° 30' of direction. At Leadville they are half way up Mt. Lincoln, and at the summit they are nearly 12,000 feet above ocean level, the highest railway in the world. Some of our eastern people will scarcely believe me when I say that portions of this wonderful railroad are above the clouds. The day I came out here I noticed a violent rain storm in the Arkansas Valley, while, where we were, in the same valley three thousand feet higher—nearer the top of the range—the sun was shining brightly, as bright as it was ever seen in any part of the East. The rainy season is about over and we may now expect Egyptian skies of the clearest, grandest unchanging blue. Where I am sitting I can look out of my tent toward the east and see, clearly defined, the huge masses of upheaved matter, with their tilted strata, constituting what we call mountains, sloping away into ethereal space—almost, it seems, eternity.

I am unable to describe the grandeur of the western scenery—it surpasses all that imaginative man can picture. At our feet flows the turbulent water of the "Yampa;" back of us a gloomy canon; before us a most beautiful valley; on the side of us majestic mountains, their bases covered with timber, a species of pine, rear their huge forms; half way up we reach the timber line, and above that there is nothing but bare rock clear to the summit, except in four which I can see that are snow-capped. To this the setting sun lent his most gorgeous dyes, making it truly indescribable. All the beauties of nature seem to be thrown into the western part of this glorious land in which we live. Two hundred miles east of us nothing greets the eye but an unbounded plain; here we are in "bunched-up gorgeous mountains." One hundred miles farther west we are in a high arid basin, whose waters have no outlet to the ocean, but are hemmed in on all sides by the "walls of creation." Grand and glorious country! Strongest of the strong; grandest of the grand; freest of the free; wealthiest of the wealthy; best on the globe! Who would see it drop to ruin? Who would exchange it for some other? None!

HEAVENWARD.

By MISS AMELIA THOROFF. In the meadows, in the woodland, Rosy, dimpled, feet and bare Wandering in the dawn of childhood— A little babe without a care. Light I caught the passing sunbeams, Through the waxen fingers fair, Tossed them back upon the meadows Threw them on the scented air. By my side and ever watchful, Least my infant feet should stray To some dark and miry pitfall— A loving mother led my way. And as moments speeded onward And the childhood hours flew by, Hopes so bright were often scattered As life's morning dawn went by. How she watched, and prayed, and guided, Checking off my wilful ways Till the hours of childhood glided, Like a scroll they rolled away. With advice so fondly heeded Swiftly then the moments flew And my bark o'er life's steam glided Catching sunbeams floating through, Life's short dream with her now over, And her work pronounced—well done. O'er the crystal sea they bore her, To that land beyond the sun. Oh, her fond regret at parting When she saw the tears I shed, But a holy light was streaming Round her when her spirit fled. Lo! the gates of gold gleam yonder In the light beyond the blue And bewildering is the splendor Of the glory shining through. When I come to lay my burden By the golden gates ajar, Weary footsore and laden; Having journeyed from afar. May I then, Lord—Thou permitting— Bring my cross—life's burden—home, And be crowned—Christ interceding With the blessed around—Thy throne.
