

USELESS! USELESS!

Some New Facts About the Death of Wilkes Booth.

The following is from the letter of a correspondent who has visited the Garrett farm, where John Wilkes Booth was shot: William Garrett is, I should judge, approaching thirty-five years of age. He is a rather tall, slender man, with a full suit of black whiskers. He is a farmer, and was dressed as became his vocation.

"I have been over to visit your old home and gather some points about the death of Booth, and I have come to visit you for the same purpose."

"Those were serious times indeed," he replied, "and it has always been a wonder to me that the real facts about his sojourn at our house have never yet been truthfully told. I was Booth's constant companion nearly all the time he was at our home. Between 2 o'clock and 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the 18th of April, Captain Jett brought Booth to our place. He told father that Booth was a wounded Confederate soldier; that he had surrendered with Lee's army, and that he had gone to his home in Maryland, where they had demanded that he take the oath of allegiance; that he would not do this and he was now making his way back to join Joe Johnston's army in North Carolina."

"What was the general tenor of his conversation?" "Whatever he had to say was about the war. He never alluded to the assassination of the President. He reiterated the story that Captain Jett had told my father, and he also said that he had been engaged in the riots in Baltimore when the Massachusetts Troops were fired upon. Although he talked so much of the war I could not ascertain what regiment he belonged to. I had been a Confederate and had a Confederate uniform, which he wanted, and I agreed to exchange with him.

"I am going back into the army and need your uniform, and you are going to be a citizen and need my citizens' clothes," he argued.

"My!" said Mr. Garrett, with a shudder, "what a narrow escape I had. Suppose Booth had been captured with my uniform on, and I had been found in possession of his clothes?"

"Was he well dressed?" "Not particularly. He had on a very good suit of clothes for those times, and I thought I was making a good bargain by trading my old Confederate uniform for them."

"Was there nothing in his manner which led you to suspect that he was not what he represented himself to be?"

"Nothing whatever. The last night he was at our house he slept in the room with my brother and me, but he had very little to say. The next day he and I were around all day together, and yet I suspected nothing. I had a pistol, and we went out to shoot at a mark."

"Was he a good shot?" "He claimed to be, and said he would shoot five balls in succession through a knothole in the gate some two inches in diameter. He took position about two rods off and fired all the five shots, and then sent me to see the result. I could find where any of the balls had struck, and Booth said he had put all the five balls through the knothole. When we came to examine the pistol, however, to reload it, we found all five balls still in the pistol, the powder having exploded without driving out the bullets. He laughed as heartily as I did at the fizzle, and we tried no more marksmanship."

"Were you the one who brought the paper announcing Lincoln's assassination?"

"No, sir; that was my brother Jack. We were all at dinner when that occurred. Brother Jack said that the President was shot and that $100,000 reward had been offered for the apprehension of his murderer. I said: 'Gracious! don't I wish he would come this way and I could capture him.' Booth turned upon me and said with great earnestness:

"Would you betray him for $100,000 if you could?"

"I would, indeed," I replied; "$100,000 is a great lot of money."

"Booth turned away and became thoughtful, and had very little to say after that. Some time after Harold came from Bowling Green, and they went away to the woods together. Before they returned father had determined that they could not remain in the house over night. He had become convinced that they were some kind of suspicious characters. We imagined that they were members of Mosby's gang and might steal our horses. When we told them they could not sleep in the house they asked if they could not go under the house. Father said that would not do, as the dogs would get after them."

"Let us go out into one of the out-buildings," said Booth. Father finally consented to this, and they went out into the barn, which was filled on one side with corn blade fodder and on the other with farming utensils and a lot of furniture belonging to refugees from Fort Royal. After they got to the barn I went and looked the door with a padlock on the outside, so that they could not get out without making a noise. When I returned to the house I was not exactly satisfied with that precaution, and said to brother Jack that we would take our pistols and go and sleep in the corn-crib near the barn, that we might more readily prevent any attempt on their part to steal the horses. About 2 o'clock in the morning we were awakened by a commotion at the house, and Jack and I both ran up as fast as possible, and found father in his night clothes in the custody of the soldiers, who were threatening to kill him if he did not reveal the whereabouts of the two men. When brother Jack came up, he said to the soldiers:

"I will show you where the men are, and the officers released father and took Jack and me into custody."

"The men are in the barn," said Jack, and the officers ordered him to lead the way there. A moment later the soldiers had surrounded it, and Jack and I were put under arrest. One of the detectives demanded of Booth that he surrender, and then unlocked the door and pushed brother Jack in, with the command that he go and tell them to come out and give themselves up. My brother approached the point where Booth was lying on the corn blades, and said:

"The soldiers are here after you, and they want you to surrender. If you don't come out they threaten to burn the barn and destroy all our property."

"Get out of here, young man," whispered Booth, desperately, "or I will take your life. You have betrayed me."

"Brother Jack tried to argue with him as to the uselessness of resistance, and appealed to Booth to prevent the destruction of our property. Booth became very violent, and my brother came out and repeated to the officers that Booth's only reply had been a threat to kill him. The officer then took my brother and me and placed us a short distance from the barn, and set a light directly in front of us. Two men were placed to guard us, with instructions that the first time Booth fired upon any of the party they should immediately shoot us. Booth, who had been watching the operation through a crack in the barn, and heard the order of the officer for our execution, shouted at the top of his voice:

"That is unfair; these men are innocent. These people do not know who I am."

"The officer then revoked the order he had given, and Colonel Conger, one of the detectives, ordered me to pile dry brush against the corner of the barn so that it could be fired. I had piled but little when Booth called to me and said:

"Young man, you had better stop that. If you put any more against this place I will shoot you."

"Colonel Conger then ordered me to stop and Lieutenant Baker began a parley with the surrender of the fugitives. Booth was determined from the first that he would not be taken alive and he so informed Lieutenant Baker. Harold, however, wanted to give himself up, and Booth, after calling him an arrant coward, virtually drove him out of the barn into the hands of the officers. There was quite an extended parley between Baker and Booth, during which Booth begged the officer to draw his men off fifty yards, then twenty-five yards, and then he came down to ten yards, and give him a chance for his life.

"Be fair, captain," said Booth, "and give me a show. I could have killed you a dozen times to-night, but I took you to be a brave man. Now give me a chance for my life."

"You must surrender," replied Lieutenant Baker, "we came to take you prisoner, not to kill you."

"I will never be taken alive," retorted Booth; "you may make up your mind I will fight to the death."

"Hardly had the last words died upon his lips before a blaze shot up among the dry fodder. Colonel Conger had during the talk slipped around to the back of the barn, and lighting a handful of dry straw, had passed it through a crack in the boards and fired the building. The combustible material inside the barn burned like tinder, and in a moment the whole inside of the building was a blaze of light, and in the middle Booth could be seen leaning upon his crutches, with his carbine in his hands, trying to get a sight and a shot at his enemies. He could not see beyond the light which surrounded him, while those outside could see him plainly. At last, when the fire was fast approaching him he started for the door, as if about to take his last desperate chance for life. He had only advanced a step or two when the crack of a carbine was heard and Booth fell, mortally wounded, shot through the neck by one of the soldiers who had been sent to capture him."

"Lieutenant Baker and myself were the first to reach him after he fell, and to carry him from the burning building. Both of us then thought that he had shot himself, and I am not yet convinced that he did not. He attempted several times to speak, but his words were incoherent, and as soon as possible we bore him to the house and laid him upon the porch, and did everything possible to ease his dying moments. The story of the death scene is the same as that of thousands of other men who died in the war from gunshot wounds."

"Useless, useless!" These were the last words Booth ever spoke."

A Mexican Salutation.

Mary Hallock Foote, in "A Provincial Capital of Mexico," in the Century, says: As the white mules pace sedately down the roughly paved streets the ladies keep a hand ready to make the customary signal of greeting from the carriage windows to their friends at the windows and balconies of the street. It is an indescribably fascinating gesture—so swift and subtle, almost like a fleeting expression across the face. It is made by a quick flutter of the second finger, the hand being raised, palm inward, to a level with the eyes. How much its charm is enhanced by the beauty of those dark Southern eyes it half conceals they would take a very stolid observer to decide. It seemed to me excessively intimate; in Morelia, I believe, it is kept for one's friends only, but in the capital it is the usual greeting at a distance between acquaintances. I have seen nothing prettier in their social customs, except the way the ladies meet and lean their cheeks together, and pat each other softly on the back of the shoulder.

The Future of the Mormon System. In the Century the "Legal Aspects of the Mormon Problem" are discussed by Arthur G. Sedgwick, who concludes as follows:

The failure of the attempt to break up the Mormon system by congressional legislation does not by any means show that the Mormon system will ultimately prevail in Utah. The operation of natural causes is certain in the long run to sap the foundations of polygamy. The railroads have already brought the Territory into communication with the rest of the country, and the development of the mines must ultimately bring in a large Gentile population—almost altogether male. A strong tendency in the direction of marriages between Gentile men and the daughters of Mormon parents must spring up. Indeed, this is said to show itself already. There is no surplus of women in the West from which to recruit polygamous households; the births of the two sexes are always very nearly equal, and the Mormon population is no longer being rapidly increased from abroad, as it was in the times of the early persecution of the church. It is now stationary, or nearly so, and being rapidly hemmed in by a community having a social system which all experience shows is the only one permanently adapted to modern industrial life.

As the Territory fills up and the Mormons are brought more and more into relations with the rest of the world, one of the strongest internal causes of disintegration will unquestionably be the sense of shame operating upon the younger female generation. In the natural course of things some of the daughters of Mormon householders must marry Gentiles, and others, who do not marry outside the church, will be made keenly aware that they are surrounded by a community which regards their position as a degraded one. As long as they could keep themselves separated from the rest of the world this Gentile feeling was of little consequence to them. It did not affect them in their daily life; it was something remote from them which they did not even need to disregard. This cannot continue forever, and indeed a change must begin if it has not begun already, as soon as the surrounding monogamic Gentile system of marriage has a fair opportunity to enter into competition with its rival. Under these circumstances there is nothing to be done with the Mormons but to let them alone. Persecution has been tried and has only served to strengthen and increase them. Law has been tried and has proved of no avail, because it has not been enforced. From the circumstances of the case it cannot be.

Nervousness, and all derangements of the nervous system, are usually connected with a diseased condition of the blood. Debility is a frequent accompaniment. The first thing to be done is to improve the condition of the blood. This is accomplished by taking VEGETINE. It is a nerve medicine, and possesses a controlling power over the nervous system.

That the Constitution is Wrecked. By periodically recurring attacks of malaria, if they are not arrested, is a fact too amply proven by the haggard looks, worn frames and nervous debility of those who have felt the malign influence for any length of time, to admit of reasonable doubt. The pleasant and safe specific, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, roots out the disease and prevents its return, and is also a curative for the debilitating effects of dyspepsia, as well as for irregularity of the bowels and kidneys, and for rheumatism. A professional "spotter," a man employed by a railroad company to hunt up lost cars, says that not only do the roads keep each other's cars and use them for local business without paying, but in many cases they are actually stolen. To parloin a car it must be sent to the repair shop and changed so as to become unrecognizable. This requires the connivance of several persons, sometimes including the "spotter" of the road owning the car, and finally a sale is made to the company owning the shops, and proceeds are divided.
