> -Our townsman Whittekin reurned from Harrisburg on last Monday morning, after a stay of a week, seeming well pleased with his visit. He says he rammaged around through the archives of the old Keystone State, and among the curious and likewise valuable things he brought back is a map of Pennsylvania made 90 years ago. He speaks in laudatory terms of Hon. J. B. Agnew and his estimable lady, who united in endeavoring to make his visit pleasant, as he does with all his friends. Mr. Agnew holds a responsible position in the Department of Internal Affairs, which Mr. W. thinks he fills with singular ability. The rapid progress made since last fall. A public hall will be built by Byron, in which religious meetings, debating and literary societies and other public gatherings may be held. A reading room will be attached to this institution, supplied with newspapers, periodicals and books. An effort will be made to have a school house erected the coming summer, and a postoffice established as soon as the railroad carries the mail past this point. Both these projects will in all probability be successfully accomplished. Mr. Byron has 2,100 acres of timber land here, covered with pine, hemlock and hard wood, among which cherry figures conspicuously. The locality has for some time been known as Cunningham Roads, Anna Deice and Zilla R. Cook. but the village will be dubbed Forest City. Only a short distance from here Frost's mills are located. These mills do not have the permanent agpearance of the Byron improvements, but will cut timber for some time to come. is a town of long standing, and the name is known far and near, but comparatively few people know that the town was composed of four houses until recently, the railroad company has erected a supply depot, a storage room and a residence for the section foreman. The material of the old Elk City station has been all moved to this point and the station will be rebuilt here without delay. A large tannery is to be built at this point this spring and the town may then be expected to spring into a new existence and have a number of residences added to its streets. The derrick of Dr. Towler's test well is plainly visible from the railroad, and should the prayers of the people be answerd and oil found in paying quantities, the place would take on an air of bustling activity that would surprise the old forests.

Those who argue that railroads are a detriment to a country at large, which class happily is small, would have to travel along the Pittsburgh, Bradford & Buffalo road with their eyes shut if they would not be convinced of the error of their opinions. Lines Written on the Death of a Dearly Beloved Sister.

BY FRANK C. RIKER. While far out on the Western plains, A message to me came, That leaves me sad and lonly, And fills my heart with pain. It was a message from a loved one-

From a broken-hearted mother-Saying that "your sister Minnie Has gone to her heavenly father." This is the way the message read : "Pear son, if I could spare you The pain I know that this will cause, By the message I now send you. 'And still it falls upon me-

The sad news I must break; I know how it will grieve you,-I fear your heart will break, 'Dear son, how it will grieve me, Such sad tidings to you send; Fo-day we buried Minnie Ever more from mortal pain.

On February the 15th, The year 1882, Our God did send a messenger, That bid her she must go. 'He sent to her your sister Who had gone to heaven before; She came to guide dear Minnie

Over to the golden shore. Long hours, twenty-four, she lingered Upon a dying bed. And many a friend did linger near To bathe and soothe her aching head.

'And many a tear was creeping down On cheeks of snowey white, For soon they knew dear Minnia Must pass from mortal sight.

'Dear son, I know our Minnie As an angel she will wait To guide us up to heaven, And through the golden gate. 'I am ready for my summons

From the loved ones gone before; I know that they await for me Over on the other shore. Dear son, come hasten to us; Come hasten to your home,

For now our darling Minnie's gone, It leaves us all alone. You know your father and myself Are growing very old, And the day can not be far off-

The day we will be called. And I know that it would comfort you To watch as one you love, When we leave this world of trouble
