His modest, retiring disposition was sometimes mistaken for unfriendly reserve, but a larger acquaintance never failed to discover his warmth of heart, and knit all to him with true respect and esteem. The subject of this sketch was born at Bangor, Maine, in the year 1810. He came at the age of eleven, with his parents, to this then almost uninhabited region. The family at first resided at Franklin, where his father, the Rev. Hezekiah May, preached for a short time, removing soon after to Tionesta Here this devoted servant of God, who had previously been sent into the wilds of Maine as a Missionary by the New England Society for the promotion of the Gospel, continued his lahors, aided and supported by his gifted wife, Margeret White May, of blessed memory.

Descended thus from Puritan stock reared by such self-sacrificing, devoted parents, amid the bardships of a wilderness home, he grew into a manhood physically robust and powerful. Socially, gentle and generous; morally, upright and pure. Add to this that his faith in the religious principles and tenets of his ancestors never wavered, and we have the full, rounded charachas increased in a somewhat larger ter of a christian gentleman.
