

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Terms:—Congress $20; State Senator, $10; Assembly $10; District Attorney $8. These terms are strictly cash in advance—unless otherwise notified.

CONGRESS.

FOR REPUBLICAN.— Please announce the name of Hon. A. Cook, of Forest County, as a candidate for Congress in the 25th District, subject to the usages of the Republican party. MANY FRIENDS.

ASSEMBLY.

We are authorized to announce that E. L. DAVIS will be a candidate for election to the office of Assembly, subject to the usages of the Republican party.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

We are authorized to announce T. J. VANGHISEN ESQ., of Tionesta, as a candidate for District Attorney, subject to Republican usages.

The Ford brothers who killed Jesse James, the prince of outlaws, have been tried, found guilty, and sentenced to be hung on the 19th of May; but Governor Crittenden stepped in and granted them an unconditional pardon. It was at the governor's instance that Jesse James was captured "alive or dead." The Ford's preferred to kill the outlaw instead of attempting his capture alive. This is a severe strain upon an executive's prerogative, but undoubtedly the nature of the case demanded heroic action. But Jesse James had a large following in the State of Missouri, and it begins to look as though this episode would make two political parties in the State, a James and an anti-James party; or rather one party siding with thieves and murderers, and the other in favor of law and order. This, perhaps is a broad way of stating it, but the question resolves itself to this at last.—Warren Ledger. The Ledger's ideas on this subject are among the most sensible we have yet seen. The idea of lionizing a cut-throat like James is wicked in the extreme.

MOSGROVE DECLINES.

The Indiana National, the Greenback organ of this Congressional district, publishes, in its last issue, a letter from Hon. James Mosgrove, in which that gentleman declines being a candidate for renomination, assigning as cause for his determination "large and varied business connections that require constant personal attention at home." This action of our present Representative will open the door for new aspirants to Congressional honors in the Greenback and Democratic parties, and already several candidates have been mentioned. The National promptly trots out Mr. Jas. A. McQuown, of Indiana county, and present County Commissioner, as the choice of the Greenbackers of that county; and it is intimated that Jefferson county will present a candidate—a gentleman who has figured actively in the Democratic and Greenback parties having an itching for the seat now occupied by Mr. Mosgrove. A new deal will doubtless take place, but our opponents may as well save their breath, as it is the determination of Republicans to drop their bickering this year and give their candidate a united support, which will insure his election.—Brookville Republican.

GENERAL JAMES A. BEAVER.

Four years ago the gentleman whose name heads this article was prominently mentioned as a candidate for Governor. He was believed by many to be the coming man. But he was not pressed, and Gov. Hoyt carried off the prize. From that day, however, to the present, he has been looked upon by Republicans in all parts of the State, as the probable successor of the present incumbent. His ability as a lawyer, his splendid record as a soldier, his high moral character, all tended to render him an exceedingly available candidate for the highest office in the gift of the people of Pennsylvania. This has also been understood by the Democratic party, and not being able to discover anything in his character which would prove distasteful to the people, they have raised the cry that he is a candidate of the bosses. We concede that in this position they come nearer to the truth than they usually do. The bosses are undoubtedly bringing about his nomination, for in the twenty-eight counties which have chosen delegates he is the unqualified choice of the delegates of at least twenty-four. In these counties the bosses are the Republican people. They have taken this matter in hand and propose to be heard. They say we will nominate this man who has led a blameless life, whose ability is unquestioned, who left a leg upon the field of battle as a test of his patriotism, and then we will see how many of the citizens of the old Keystone State will vote to strike him down. How many will listen to the yelpings of the Democratic curs and their guerilla allies, and vote to turn over to Democratic hands the State Government and the Legislature. We might as well meet the issue now. If we cannot win with such a candidate, who will have 50,000 Grand Army men to strip for the fight in his behalf, who will have thousands upon thousands of those who respect the ordinances of the Sabbath and the Christian religion to support him regardless of politics, then we cannot win any. We accept the situation. Gen. Beaver will be nominated. He already has the central counties solid for him. He will carry the west and the north and very many of the eastern counties. The bosses, in other words, the Republican masses, are doing the work for him.—McKean Miner.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To Wolfe's First Lieutenant from General Beaver's Home.

[From the Philadelphia Press.] BELLFONTE, Pa., April 10, 1882. I. D. McKee, Esq., Chairman State Committee, Citizen's Republican Association, Philadelphia. DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 5th instant did not reach me promptly, owing to my absence from home. You frankly ask me as to the probabilities of my taking part with your political association in the next campaign in our State, and as to "my views upon the probable issues to be raised this fall against any nomination that may be made by Cameron & Co." So far as we are true Republicans, I think it would be a serious mistake to make up our minds to oppose candidates or nominees for office simply because Mr. Cameron should happen to favor good men. Take, for example, the popular indications pointing to the nomination of General James A. Beaver for Governor—a gentleman of eminent fitness, and justly deserving all the honors that the people of this Commonwealth can ever bestow—do you for a moment think that we should forget our duty to party and to the country because it is given out that Mr. Cameron, with thousands of others, also favors his nomination. And in this connection, from my personal knowledge of General Beaver, you may accept my assurance that when he becomes Governor of Pennsylvania he will represent the entire Republican party, and no faction of it. Not in twenty years has any candidate for the office of Governor in our State been so clearly indicated by the people as that of General Beaver at the present time. I doubt if any party could, or would dare, defeat his nomination, and this simply because the people who compose the Republican party are moving in his behalf. And would you, therefore, deem it wise that we should oppose him? Take the list of eminent and honorable names suggested for the Supreme bench, shall it be a political crime against their names that Mr. Cameron also makes choice of one or other of those? This would not be a political reform, but political madness rather. When we have, as citizens, done all in our power faithfully and well to name the best men for office, and voted for them, we have, as I think, discharged our full political duty. Do what we may, evil practices will spring up, and when, from time to time, these become unbearable, the people will arise in their might and their integrity and overthrow them. Politics has become a high art and the professionals in it shrewd and wary, and to counteract mischievous work we must learn their skill and with it overthrow those who do evil. To make our work efficient we must remain in the party to help purify and elevate it, and not, by decrying, attempt to destroy. Our work must not be spasmodic, but with constant vigilance working together for good. The grandeur of the achievements of our party in the past, its record upon the history of our country, my duty and my honor impel me to work bravely on within the ranks, hoping for the best, and I trust you, too, and your organization may be found there also with me.

I am, very truly, JAMES MILLIKEN.

Jesse James. This is an age of rapid book making. We have the first forcibly exemplified in the announcement of an illustrated volume containing the lives of the James and Younger Brothers, including an exhaustive account of the recent successful methods of pursuit of the noted robbers under the direction of Gov. Crittenden, and the final culmination in the tragedy of the killing of Jesse James in St. Joseph, Mo. As giving interest to this narration the profuseness of illustration is a noticeable feature. Additional to the cuts illustrating persons, scenes and incidents in the 20 years career of outlawry, are those from photographs of the persons and surroundings in the last act of the drama. They include pictures of Jesse James before and after death, his young wife and two children, the mother and sister of the outlaw, the detectives, Fords, who did the killing, and the house in which the deed was enacted. It includes, also a well-executed full page likeness of Gov. Crittenden who devised the means of breaking up the band, and relieved Missouri of the stigma of "The Bandit State." It is graphic both in statement and illustration of this sensational tragedy that terminates the long and wonderful career of this noted outlaw. The entire history was written by Dr. Dacus from facts given him by family and friends of the outlaws, and attested by final events. The repeated interviews with the young wife strikingly corroborate the thoroughness and accuracy of what had been previously given in this volume. As a record of contemporaneous history it will excite the interest and wonder of every reader—wonder that such a career of bold, reckless, successful outlawry could extend through a period of 20 years before meeting with a tragic termination. As giving the social and domestic life of an outlaw's family, it is of absorbing interest. It constitutes a page in American history of startling character, and will enlist the attention of the thoughtful as well as the cursory reader. The work is published for the subscription trade by N. D. Thompson & Co., St. Louis, Mo., and affords agents a chance for rapid and profitable sales. We advertise them in another column.
