In ancient Egypt the tax collector's receipts were inscribed on fragments of broken crockery. The roots of many plants retain their vitality under intense temperatures. Boiling water has been applied to some without injury to them, and some plants absorb poisons that are destructive to others. The seeds on which birds have fed often retain their powers of germination for a long period, as birds sometimes carry them in their bodies from one country to another, where they have grown and multiplied.

After a cruise of a few months in the South Pacific a French man-of war was recently found to have specimens of living corals growing upon her hull. The interesting discovery has thrown some light on the question of the rapidity of growth of corals. The evidence tends to show that the vessel, on passing a reef of the Gambier Islands, against which she rubbed, had picked up a young fungia, which adhered to the sheating, and grew to a diameter of nine inches and a weight of two and a half pounds in nine weeks.

It would still astonish many persons. no doubt, to inform them that even the purest country air is peopled with a host of microscopic corpuscles, animal and vegetable, and even with a multitude of living creatures which enter into our lungs together with the air which we breathe, and which come in time to take up their residence in our bodies, as in a well-furnished house all prepared to receive them. The surprise would be greater and more disagreeable should we add that the number of these germs thus held by the air in suspension enormously increases in places thickly or even constantly inhabited-that in the great cities they multiply to fantastic proportions and that in Paris the number of these germs within the circle of the fortifications is, according to the statistics of micrographers, not less than five thousand billions. Such is the "pure air" which we breathe.

George W. Simpson's Dilemma.

"Heaven help me!" Reine McCloskey looked up with a startled expression in her deep, fawnlike eyes as these words reached her, and as her glance met that of George W. Simpson she saw, or fancied that she did, a look of haunting fear and nameless terror pass over his face, while the hand that held her own seemed to tremble slightly and the finely-chiseled lips quivered as if in pain.
"You are ill," she said, placing her hand upon his arm and looking up wistfully at the face of the man she loved so well.

For an instant George did not reply. Then bending tenderly over her until his lips were almost touched by the coronal of sunny hair that her father had agreed to pay for next month, he kissed the fair white brow that was upturned to him.

"You love me, sweetheart?" he

"Better than life," replied the girl, drawing still closer to him and stroking with a gentle touch his handsome face, which was hot and feverish-" but you really are not well. Let us go into the conservatory where the air is purer."

"No," said George, "let me sit here beside you for a few moments. You have said that you love me, Reine. Is that love the mere ephemeral passion of a girlish fancy, or is it a true, deep, holy affection that will go on and on forever and ever, each day that dies on the horizon's purple rim making it more steadfast and abiding?"

For answer she placed her hand again within his own, and as she looked up to him he saw that the beautiful brown eyes were suffused with tears. "You are cruel to ever doubt my love, darling," she said between the sobs that made her words sound like cider coming out of a jug-"far more cruel than you know. No matter what betides, I shall always love you, and your amiles and caresses be ever to me as the gentle dew that kisses into new life the parched and withered flowers of an August day. Nothing in the wide, wide world can ever shake that love."

"Not even misfortune, or a bitter disappointment?" he asks.

"Nothing!" exclaims the girl. "But why do you ask?" and her ruddy cheeks became ashen with a sudden fear. "What has happened?"

"Be brave, my precious one," he murmurs, while Reine sits there in silence, every feature strained in tense agony, awaiting his next words. " We are engaged for the next dance,

I believe," he says. "Yes," is the answer. "It is the racquet?"

"It is."

"I cannot dance with you, my "Why?" she asks, rising from the

The Need of Sleep.

"To tell you the truth," remarked a venerable Atlanta physician, "I do not think that a person should ever be waked, except, of course, in special cases and where there is a necessity for it. Nature knows her own business, and that man who follows nature's rules the closest will receive most of her blessings. A man in his natural state is healthy and sound. He contracts disease or else some one else contracts it for him. The ailments of the father and mother are visited upon the children, not because it is a source of pleasure to the Almighty, but because it is nature's law. One of nature's rules is that a man shall have sleep. If it had been intended that a man should work twenty-four hours out of twenty-four. nature would have made the sun shine without interruption all the time. Lights are an innovation. Wild beasts don't have lights. They are reserved for man, with his superior intelligence and multiplicity of bodily ailments. Night was made for sleep and the day for work. The man who disregards the demands of his mind and body for the amount of rest which nature claims suffers sooner or later and pays dearly for having abused this prime rule of health. Thom; son, in his "Seasons," and Shakespeare, in many of his works, have, perhaps, no peers in describing it, and yet "ethereal spring" is freighted with malaria, "that insidious foe, lurking unseen in the very air we breathe." It spreads over the fairest pertions of our land; brings death and disease to thousands; cuts off scores upon scores of our children and youth, as well as those in advanced life. A pestilence is regarded with little less apprehension, and people every-where are asking, "What is it?" "Where does it come from?" "What will cure it?" KIDNEY-WORT AS A SPRING MEDICINE.

When you begin to lose appetite; -- have a headache, a pain in your side, back and shoulders;-to toss about at night in restless dreams;-wake in the morning with a foul mouth and furred tongue;-feel disinclined to go about your work, heavy in body and oppressed in mind;-have a fit of the blues;when your urine gets scanty or high colored; -to suffer with constipation, diarrhoes or indigestion;-have a pasty, sallow face, dull eyes, and a blotched skin; one or all of these common complaints will certainly be evidences that your liver is disordered, torpid or perhaps diseased.
