WHAT A NEW YORK REPORTER HAW IN A STATION MOUSE.

Sad Scenes of Drankonness Among Young Women and Old-The Brunkard and Her Grandchild.

A frosty night and a bitter wind. The stars looked white and cold. Away down the Bowery I could see the great Saturday night multitude sweeping along the sidewalks. Everybody predicted a thick subwaterm before morning. As I turned into Fourth street the wind whistled shrilly through the telegraph wires overhead and rattle 1 all the windows in the neighborhood. Something lay across the wall to shut out the eves of the big city. It was a young girl with long soft brown hair tangled about her shoulders.

Her face was fair and she was shapely. At first it seemed as if she was sleeping. but a closer examination showed that she was attempting to hold herself up on her elbows. It was hard to imagine a more stupid or pitiful expression than that which rested upon her features as she blinked in a vague and aimless manner at a small flask lying on the pavement at girl to her feet a quick heavy step caused me to look around, and at my elbow was a policeman.

'You needn't disturb yourself, sir,' he said, "she is drunk. It's a great pity that so young a girl has come to such shame already.

The policeman shook the girl roughly and then raised her to her feet. The soft brown hair was blown across her face and she pushed it back. Then she began to erg. The policeman threw the flask into the midale of the street, where it fell with a crash and was disintegrated into a thousand fragments.

"That's the curse of the world," he said. "I've seen more crime and suffering from the bottle than any other twenty causes. Just look at that girl and see what a mere animal she has bebome under the influence of rum."

The girl laughed in an idiotic way as she staggered in the grasp of the bluecoated philosopher.

"Lemme go," she stammered. "S'none 'I your business."

Inside of five minutes we were in the station house, where another policeman was telling the sergeant how he had dragged a drunken man four blocks in order to keep him out of the way of wagous. The prisoner he referred to mumbled out a few words of defiance and was whisked through a back door in a jiffy

The drunken girl was arraigned before the sergeant. Then she told in thick tones that she had never been arrested before, and that if the good gentleman get drunk again. It was no use. The sergeant shook his head. "If I let you go now," he said. "you might fare worse even than you have. As Journal of Health. you are young and respectable-looking I'll give you a bed to sleep in to-night. You are like a thousaud others I have incurable disease.

The sergeant took me to the lodgingsaid. homeless creatures you see lying on platform of pine boards lay eight or ten women. They were dirty, slatternly and miserable. One slovenly hag sat up

A NIGHT IN A CITY JAIL, street sitting on the side of a bed in the cell which had been fitted up for the accommodation of such a case. She sat with her hands in her lan and her face bent mordfly toward the floor. When I asked her how she came to be in such a plight she told me that her mother taught her to drink, but al ways warned her to drink in moderation. She used to take beer with her meals at first. Then she tried a little whisky, and found that its effects were more exhilarating. From that time on she had always kept a flask of whisky under her pillow. She had been drunk a score of times in the house, but had never yet been drunk in the public streets until that night.

"I've heard that same story a hundred gray sidewalk-something that needed a times over," said the sergeant. "It's a mistake to say that most girls are taught to drink in beer gardens. The great majority of those who drink intoxicants begin the habit at home, under the eves of their parents. That girl has probably got some wretched old father who thinks of nothing but whisky him-self from morning till night. When he hears of his daughter's arrest the chances are that he will go snivelling up to the court in the morning wringing his hands at a small flask lying on the pavement at her feet. Just as I was about to assist the that he always told his child to do what was right. He will wonder how it was possible that his girl could ever get drunk, instead of wondering how she could ever watch the example he set to her and yet, keep sober."-New York

Advice to Stoop-Shouldered People.

World.

A stooping figure is not only a familiar expression of weakness or old age, but it is, when caused by careless habits, a direct cause of contracted chest and defective breathing. Unless you rid yourself of this crook while at school you will probably go bent to your grave. There is one good way to cure it. Shoulder-braces will not help. One needs, not an artificial substitute, but some means to develop the muscles whose duty it is to hold the head and shoulders I know of but one bull's eve erect. shot. It is to carry a weight on the head. A sheepskin or other strong bag filled with twenty to eighty pounds of sand is good weight. When engaged in your morning studies, either before or after breakfast, put this bag of sand on your head, hold your head erect, draw your chin close to your nesk and walk slowly about the room, coming back, if you please, every minute or two to your book. or carrying the boos as you walk. The muscles whose duty it is to hold the head and shoulders erect are hit, not with scattering shot, but with a rifle ball. The bones of the spine and the intervertebral substance will soon accommodate themselves to the new attitude. One would only let her go she would never year of daily practice with the bag, half an hour morning and evening, will give you a noble carriage, without interfering a moment with your studies .- Hall's

How Rognes' Features are Seized and Held by the Camera-Dis-guises and Distortions. New York Heraid reporter has been visiting the "Rogues' Gallery," at police headquarters. A detective said to the scribe

"There are people who look at the pictures and say: 'Of what good can these twisted and unnatural faces be? Were their owners met in the streets their countenances would be composed. They would be altogether free of these and both escaped,-London Letter. distortions, by which they have tried to cheat the purpose of the police in photographing them. No one would know them then.' Well, that is all wrong. The very cleverest hands at preparing a false physiognomy for the camera have made their grimaces in vain. The sun has been too quick for them, and has imprisoned the lines of the profile and the features and caught the expression before it could be disguised. There is not a portrait here but has some marked characteristic by which you can identify the man who sat for it. That is what has to be studied in the Rogues' Gallery-detail. A general idea of the looks of a person derived from one of these pictures may be very misleading. The person himself will try to make it so by altering his appearance. He can grow or shave off a beard or mustache, he can change the color of either, he may become full-faced or lantern-jawed in time. But the skilled detective knows all this and looks for distinguished marks peculiar to his subject. You un-derstand me. It was a forehead drew your attention. The lines of the forehead would probably be a detective's study in that burglar's case. It did not matter much what disguise he assumed. That feature would remain a tell-tale." "Have detectives frequently succeeded in singling out by their portraits men who have tried to deceive the camera?" "Quite frequently. The very men who have gone to the most trouble to make their pictures useless have been betrayed by them Look at Dutch Heinrich's there.'

He pointed at the shaggy head looking from a frame, with the mouth distended, the eyes puckered up, and a clownish grin on the countenace that omenow suggested some of Joe Emmet's lithographs in "Fritz."

"That is utterly unlike the look Heinrichs, the burglar, wore in everyday life. He gave the people here quite a time, too, when he was taken, and he believed that he had made his portrait of no use as a means of identification; but the forehead, the nose and the general contour of the face he could not disguise, and by that same picture he was recognized and arrested. There was 'Pete Luther, or 'Banjo Pete" as they called He cut up a good deal and fixed him. his face for the sitting, but Inspector Byrnes got the rights of the picture and arrested 'Banjo' in Philadelphia.' You see that picture of 'Snatch 'Em?'"

This alias was inscribed under a comical bunch of features that were the face of Meyer Stulf, the bank sneak thief. The cheeks were blown out, the eyes were shut fast, the mouth was pouting and the torehead wrinkled. It seemed hard to fancy what they would look like in their natural shape. Lord Charles Beresford is almost as fearless a soldier as his friend (Colonel Burnaby), and consequently a great fa-vorite. It is related of him that during the hot fighting in South Africa he was riding back after an engagement, he running back after an engagement, he prertook one of his troopers, wounded, and slowly making his way afoot. He stopped and told the trooper to get up behind him. The trooper refused on the ground that if Lord Charles Beresford rode on alone he was certain to escape. Lord Charles Beresford looked at him a moment, and said : "If you don't get up I shall have to get off and knock you down." Whereupon the trooper mounted, up like a nut cracker, thought he could play the sneak without any one getting onto him from that likeness. But he made a mistake, like the rest. So did 'Bill' Vosburg, and even 'Jim' Reynolds, who is grinning down from the corner there, with his head away back and his features all distorted, could not get the best of the sun, and the camera caught enough of him to satisfy his victims."

"Then the pictures must not be considered merely as portraits when a criminal is to be identified by them?"

"In some cases they are quite sufficient. You see there is not much of that old dodge of distorting the fea-tures attempted nowadays. When we have a man dead to rights, he knows that his portrait in some shape or other must be added to the gallery, and he is shown that it is absurd to try and defeat the purposes of justice. That makes him resigned to his fate, and all our recent artistic acquisitions are good ones. Inspector Byrnes has made it a point to have the best we could get, for of late photography has been an invaluable aid to the police. In the Federal service and in all the big cities they are following our example. But this is probably the most complete criminal directory in the country. I say in some cases, because there are numbers of instances where a criminal appears in public under circumstances far different from those under which he is brought here. There are scores of men and women whose appearance in the streets gives no hint to their character. Deception is their business, and they have to study its arts carefully. It is true there are criminals brought here who, even in sitting for a photograph in the Rogues' Gallery, show a weakness to appear to advantage. I have seen women especially whose vanity cropped out the moment the muzzle of the camera was turned on them. But that is infrequent, and you must look for the faces you see here in other shapes and with other accompaniments when you catch sight of them in public."

"Is physiognomy any guide to identify criminals?"

"A very poor one. Judge for yourself. Look through the pictures in the Rogues' Gallery, and see how many pictures you find there who resemble the best people in the country. Why, you can find some of them, I dure say, sufficiently like personal acquaintances to mistake one for the other. By the by, this is no uncom-mon occurrence, and the more you consider it the more readily you will come to appreciate how easy it is for a detecto pick up the wrong man. tive Time and again I have seen victims of thieves when called upon in court to identify a prisoner seated among a number of out-siders pick out his captors, or a court clerk, or a reporter as the offender."
