

THE DENIZENS OF TUNIS.

LIFE AMONG THE MIGRATORY ARABS AND BEDOUINS.

People Who Do Not Know What a Home Is—An Exhibition by Snake Charmers.

In Tunis, North Africa, there are tens of thousands of poor Arabs and Bedouins, who have no homes or abiding places, says a writer in the Boston Herald. They are migratory in their habits, and are constantly changing about from place to place, like the sparrows or blackbirds. They do not know what the word home signifies. They come and go; they are here to-day and somewhere else tomorrow. The climate is warm and delightful, and they seek no shelter to protect them from the night dews. In the late hours of the night, wherever sleep overtakes them, they lie down in the market places, or by the sides of streets or highways, and in deep slumber await the rising of the morrow's sun. How the poorer of them live—and nineteenth-twentieths of them belong to this class—is a mystery. They apparently have no avocation, and do not worry themselves as to what they shall eat or wear. I see groups of them from 200 to 300 in all parts of the city, squatted down by the sides of the narrow streets, huddled together in the market places or in the shadows of high walls, all appearing happy and contented, and chattering together in their Arabic tongue like so many magpies. In the bazaars, and occasionally in the streets, I noticed a better class of Arabs, richly dressed in gray-colored silk costumes of their own manufacture, who are as handsome and intellectually, as I have ever seen. The higher classes have their aristocracy and their ranks of nobility, and are as proud of their titles as any of the European kings or noblemen.

In the surrounding country outside of Tunis are numerous tribes and bands of roving Bedouins, whose nomadic habits from time immemorial have stamped them a race distinct from all others in North Africa. They build no houses, and have no permanent homes, but camp out for longer or shorter periods in the forests or open plains, living in brushwood huts, or under low, black, wretched-looking tents, that beasts the field would shun for a shelter. They are the gypsies of Africa, and, like the gypsies of Spain and other countries, their natural element is fith, and their proclivities are for trading horses, thieving, laziness, and a vagabond life generally. Many of them are said to be quite wealthy, have large flocks of goats, sheep and herds of cattle which they feed upon the plains, while many are the owners of a large number of camels and fine horses which are prized for their fleetness and pure blood. In their habits, modes of living, dress, and features, they are distinct from the Arabs. Their faces are dark, swarthy, ugly, and trenchant, while those of the Arab, as a rule, have a much lighter shade, with a more pleasant, intellectual expression, signifying that they belong to a higher type of civilization. The Bedouins are splendid horsemen, and I have never witnessed such feats of horsemanship as I have seen displayed by them on the plains outside of the city on their half-wild Arabian steeds. Nearly every day in the week cavalcades of them come to the market places in the city, or to large open places outside of the city walls, where they exhibit their wonderful feats of horsemanship in running, leaping, dancing, performing tricks and exploits of so marvellous a nature as to astonish the beholder, especially if he is a foreigner.

While walking in the suburbs of the city with the interpreter of the English legation, we came across a crowd of Arabs and Bedouins who were witnessing some kind of a performance or show that evidently was of intense interest. Pushing our way through the crowd as best we could to see what the attraction was, we found another scene of snake charming in progress. This time presided over by two wild, wild-looking Bedouins, who the interpreter informed were the most celebrated snake-charmers in the regency of Tunis. The ground in front of them was literally covered with snakes. Several of them, the interpreter informed me, were very venomous, and one of the Bedouins, in a daring, incoherent speech, was endeavoring to impress the fact upon his audience, and also that their poisonous fangs had not been extracted. Picking up one of the largest and most savage-looking he would hold it in his length and tantalize it until it would spring back and fasten its fangs into his face or some part of his body. Dropping it, he would then draw out from under his bournose a small box of ointment, and apply it to the wound, which, he claimed, removed all the poisonous effects. By the time he had finished this part of the entertainment, the crowd of Arabs had largely increased, and had so far encroached upon the open space or ring where the show was being held that there was scarcely room for the snake-charmers to move about. To make the crowd fall back, one of the Bedouins adopted a quick and most effective remedy. Grasping the ugly fellow from the ground that had just been exhibiting its savage nature and venomous fangs, and which must have measured eight feet in length, he commenced running around the ring and thrusting its angry head into the frightened faces of the spectators. The snake was standing out in a horizontal line, and the Bedouin was holding it about two-thirds of the distance from the head. As it came near the Arabs, it would spring at them with its wide-open mouth, and its eyes flashing fire in a most diabolical manner. There was no hesitation in obeying the Bedouin's command to fall back. I never saw a crowd gathered around a street show expand so suddenly as this. One tall Arab, who was on his knees leaning forward, intently watching the performance, not getting out of the way in time, was seized by the savage reptile, which fastened its fangs into the hood of his bournose, in close proximity to his nose. The poor chap, thinking he had received his death wound, commenced howling and yelling in a manner that must have frightened the tigers in the distant jungles. During the excitement that followed, and while two Bedouins were endeavoring to unfasten the fangs of the serpent from the Arab's hood, to which it was clinging with a death-like grip, the other serpent on the ground commenced gliding quickly away in different directions, close at the heels of the panic-stricken Arabs, who were running different ways, as if the poisonous serents were in full chase, ready to fasten on to their bare feet. About the same time the interpreter and myself were walking hastily away in the direction of our hotel, fearing we should be late to dinner.

Anecdotes of Stonewall Jackson.

Col. Henry Kyd Douglas contributes a paper on "Stonewall Jackson in Maryland," to the Century, from which we quote as follows: "The next evening, Sunday, he went into Frederick for the first time to attend church, and there being no service in the Presbyterian Church he went to the German Reformed. As usual he fell asleep, but this time more soundly than was his wont. His head sunk upon his breast, his cap dropped from his hands to the floor, the prayers of the congregation did not disturb him, and only the choir and the deep-toned organ awakened him. Afterward I learned that the minister was credited with much loyalty and courage because he had prayed for the President of the United States in the very presence of Stonewall Jackson. Well, the General didn't hear the prayer, and if he had he would doubtless have felt like replying as General Ewell did, when asked at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, if he would permit the usual prayer for President Lincoln—'Certainly; I'm sure he needs it.'"

"The troops being on the march, the General and staff rode rapidly out of town and took the head of the column. Just a few words here in regard to 'Barbara Fritchie,' a touching poem which sprang full-armed from the loyal brain of Mr. Whittier. An old woman, by that now immortal name, did live in Frederick in those days, but she was eighty-four years old and bed-ridden; she never saw General Jackson, and General Jackson never saw her. I was with him every minute of the time he was in that city—he was there only twice—and nothing like the scene so graphically described by the poet ever happened. The story will perhaps live, as Mr. Whittier has boasted, until it gets beyond the reach of correction.

"On the march that day, the captain of the cavalry advance, just ahead, had instructions to let no civilian go to the front, and we entered each village we passed before the inhabitants knew of our coming. In Middletown two very pretty girls, with ribbons of red, white, and blue floating from their hair, and small union flags in their hands, rushed out of their house to meet us, came to the curbstone, and with much laughter waved their colors defiantly in the face of the General. He bowed and raised his hat, and turning with his quiet smile to the staff, said: 'We evidently have no friends in this town.' And this is about the way he would have treated Barbara Fritchie."

The Foreigner in Mexico.

The Mexican land laws discriminate very rigorously against the acquirement of land by foreigners who do not propose to become Mexican citizens, and seem to be especially framed to prevent any encroachments on the part of the United States. Thus, no foreigner may, without previous permission of the President of the Republic, acquire real estate in any of the border States, within twenty leagues (sixty miles) of the frontier; but such permission has of late been freely given to citizens of the United States for the acquirement of ranching property on the northern frontier. The ownership of real estate by a foreigner in either country or city, within fifteen miles of the coast, is, however, absolutely forbidden, except on the condition of a special act of Congress granting it. It is only, furthermore, through a direct permission of the Minister of Foreign Affairs that a foreigner in Mexico is accorded any standing in a court of justice. By the Constitution of Mexico, a foreigner who purchases any real estate in that country, without declaring that he retains his nationality, becomes a citizen of Mexico; and it is difficult to see how under such conditions he could properly invoke any protection from the country of his prior citizenship, in case he considered his rights in Mexico to be invaded. Again, the laws relating mining property in Mexico are very peculiar. No one in Mexico, be he native or foreigner, can own a mine absolutely, or in fee, no matter what he may pay for it. He may hold it indefinitely, so long as he works it; but under an old Spanish law, promulgated as far back as 1783, and still recognized, if he fails "to work it four consecutive months, with four operatives, regularly employed, and occupied in some interior or exterior work of real utility and advantage," the title is forfeited and reverts to the State; and the mine may be "denounced," and shall belong, under the same conditions, "to the denouncer who proves its desertion." The denouncer, to keep the property, must, however, at once take possession and begin the prescribed work within a period of sixty days. This practice has one great advantage over the American mining system; and that is, that litigation about original titles, and conflicting claims to mining property are almost unknown in Mexico.—Popular Science Monthly.

Spent $20,000 in Drawing Up Wills.

Publication of the fact that Mr. Charles F. Woerishoffer had several wills drawn up by his lawyers within the last few years, none of which were finally executed, prompted an old lawyer to say that Mr. Woerishoffer's case was by no means exceptional. Among the lawyer's clients there are at least a dozen wealthy men and women who order new wills almost monthly, have great care exercised in their preparation, and then, day by day, postpone signing the documents till some new circumstance arises to suggest still further changes and a new form. "I know one man," said this lawyer, "who has spent $20,000 in having wills drawn within the last few years.—New York Times.

Flax has been sown in eight counties of Nebraska by way of experiment, to see if it will not be more profitable than wheat. Chicago handled 7,000,000 hogs, more than 2,000,000 cattle, and 132,000,000 bushels of grain last year.

SELECT SIGHTINGS.

An English experimenter finds that, contrary to general opinion, a growth of ivy over a house renders the interior entirely free from moisture.

The Malays, who frequently find ancient stone axes in the soil, call them "thunderstones," believing that they proceed from thunderbolts.

Barbers near Mono Lake, California, whose waters heavy with salts of sodium and borax, use it as a natural shampooing water, to the satisfaction of their customers.

Georgia planters find a good many crows and the way of doing it is thus described: "Catch one of the birds, tie it to your body, and walk through the field with your gun cocked and finger on the trigger. The cries of the bird will cause others of its tribe to flock around you and they can then be easily shot."

The following process of preserving flour is being carried on near Utrecht, Holland: The flour is placed in a large vat or chest and heated to a certain temperature by the use of steam pipes. It is then subjected to hydraulic pressure, which reduces it to brick form. In water-tight packages flour thus prepared is said to keep fresh for years.

George E. Pim, of West Goshen, Penn., has a calf that has no eyes nor the least sign of a tail. Where the eyes should be there are two small round holes or sockets, but no eye-balls. Where the tail is usually appended the skin is as smooth and even as on the sides of the youthful bovine. It is perfectly healthy, and appears to enjoy life as well as any of the rest of the calves, but has to do it in a more quiet way.

According to the American Railroad, it costs a little more than twenty cents a mile to run a locomotive, on the average. Nearly eight cents of this is for fuel, seven and one quarter cents for pay of engineer and fireman, one-half cent for oil and waste and more than four and a half cents for repair. A ton of coal will run a locomotive twenty-four miles, a pint of oil will run eleven miles and a pound of waste 123 miles. The locomotives of a railway like the Northwest run a half-million of miles a month.

Diving for Treasure.

The English divers and Captain R. F. Stevens, Lloyd's surveyor, have just returned from the island of Grand Canary after raising a sum of no less than $90,000. This amount was lying submerged 153 feet deep about a mile from the southernmost limit of the island Grand Canary. The treasure went down about two years ago in a brand-new Spanish steamer called the Alphonso XII. The steamer had on board $100,000 worth of Spanish dollars on their way to Cuba. The insurance on the money was effected at Lloyd's and was paid over to the insurers after the vessel foundered.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required in using Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. They operate without disturbance to the constitution, diet, or occupation. For sick headache, constipation, impure blood, and purging, they are the best. The stomach, had taste in the mouth, bilious attacks, pain in region of kidneys, internal fever, indigestion, about stomach, rush of blood to head, take Dr. Pierce's "Pellets." By druggists.

Prussian census statistics show that the population of women increases faster than that of men.

"Good deeds" once said the celebrated Richter, "ring clear through heaven like a bell." One of the best deeds is to alleviate human sufferings. "Last fall my daughter was in decline," says Mrs. Mary Hinson, of Montrose, Kansas, "and everybody thought she was going into consumption. I got her a bottle of Dr. R. V. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it cured her." Such facts as the above need no comment.

A girl, baby born in New York during a terrible storm, has been named Cyclonia.

"As is the bud with an envious worm," so is many a youth cut down by the gnawing worm of consumption. But it can be made to release its hold and stop its gnawing. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will, if taken in time, effect permanent cures, not only in consumption, but in all cases of chronic throat, bronchial and lung diseases.

WHAT SCIENCE SAYS.

"The 'Fertile and Wonderful' Mechanism of the Human System." The following is a translation of the original columns of the New York Assn. of Scientists, D. C. W. writes: "The following is a description of the laboratories of the human system, as it has never been read a finer or more trustworthy one."

"Man is the greatest of all chemical laboratories. Magnificently the smallest cell of the body and what a factory is spread before the eyes of the chemist who looks into the microscope. Air, masses of solid matter, globules of drying liquid; a flash comes and the whole is consumed and needful heat is carried into every part of the system. Electrical forces also generate and are conveyed to the brain, the muscles and the various nerve centres.

"In another set of a million chambers we see various gases and vapors. By chemical action these are changed and purified in the lungs and the skin. The blood we often say is a great living river. In its current are masses which the air in the lungs did not affect: blocks of chalk; slabs of tartar; pieces of bone-ash, strings of albumen; drops of mucus, and lines of alcohol. How are these masses disposed of? Begin where you will in this great stream, or must come to the purifying places of the system. Here is all activity and an invisible force reaches out into the stream, seizes and carries the mass of waste into a chamber, thence into a smaller reservoir, and finally into a larger reservoir, which regularly discharges its contents.

"This separation of lime, uric acid and other waste material from the blood, without robbing it of a particle of the life giving human compression. In health this blood, purifying process is carried on without our knowledge. The organs in which it is done are the faithful servants whose work is silent as long as health remains.

"People strangely wait until pain strikes a nerve before they will realize that they have any trouble. They do not know that pain concerns chiefly the exterior, not the interior of the body. A certain amount of action, these blood-purifying organs with their connective tissue, must be kept in a state of activity. They may not gnaw and bite as does the tooth-ache or a scratch, but they regularly, silently report. When these organs are failing, the evidence is given in the form of a headache, blood from the face and neck, lip and eye blanched, by sending uric acid poison into the smallest veins, the skin then becoming gray, yellow or brown. They also prevent the purification of the blood in the lungs and the pulmonary difficulties, weariness and pain. Who enjoys perfect health, especially in this land where we burn the candle in one mass! The athlete breaks down in the race; the editor falls at his desk; the merchant, in his counting-room.

"Put no faith then in the wisecracker who says there is no danger as long as there is no pain. Put no faith in the physician, who ever he may be, who says 'It is a mere cold, or a slight indisposition. He knows little, if any, more than you do about it. He can neither see nor examine these organs and depends entirely upon experimental tests, that you can make as well as he.

"If the output is discolored or muddy, if it contains albumen, lymph, crystals, sweet or morbid matter, is red with escaped blood, or roily with gravel, mucus and froth, something is wrong and disease and death are not far away.

We Appeal to Experience.

For a long time we steadily refused to publish testimonials, believing that, in the opinion of the public generally, the great majority were manufactured to order by unprincipled parties as a means of disposing of their worthless preparations.

"That this view of the case is to a certain extent true, we can have no doubt.

At last, several years ago, we came to the conclusion that every intelligent person can readily discriminate between spurious and bona fide testimonials, and determined to use as advertisements a few of the many hundreds of unsolicited certificates in our possession.

In doing this, we published them as nearly as possible in the exact language used by our correspondents, only changing the phrasing, in some cases, so as to compress them into a smaller space than they would otherwise occupy, but without in the least exaggerating or destroying the meaning of the writers.

We are glad to say that our final conclusion was a correct one; that a letter containing an article having true merit finds favor with the people.

The original of every testimonial published by us is on file in our office, an inspection of which will prove to the most skeptical that our assertions made above, that only the facts are given as they appear in the original.

But as it would be very inconvenient, if not impossible, for all of our friends to call on us for the purpose of verifying the facts (there are so many), to correspond with any of the parties whose names are signed to our testimonials, we have had them all carefully examined, so far as they have made any statements in this article. In other words, if we have not published their letters as nearly verbatim as possible.

Very respectfully,

The Off Todd Story

Of the peculiar medicinal merits of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully confirmed by the voluminous testimony of thousands who have tried it. Peculiar in the combination, proportion and preparation of its ingredients, peculiar in the extreme care with which it is put up, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures where other preparations entirely fail. Peculiar in the unequalled good name it has made for itself, which is a "tower of strength abroad," peculiar in the phenomenal sales it has attained, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most popular and successful medicine before the public to-day for purifying the blood, giving strength and creating an appetite. Give it a trial.

"I suffered from wakefulness and low spirits, and also had eczema on the back of my head and neck, which was very annoying. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I have received so much benefit that I am very grateful, and I am always glad to speak a good word for Hood's Sarsaparilla."
