Here are a few hints for society young men: When you lift your hat to a lady and she passes without recognizing you keep the hat off for a few steps and with the other hand give your head a vigorous scratching. It will almost drive her crazy to decide whether you noticed the snub, or did not see her at all. Remember it is exceedingly impolite to start out for an evening walk with a lady without offering her your arm. Should you neglect to do this, and go lounging along with your arms swinging by your side, people will think you are married to her.

Two years ago, near a small village in New Jersey, called Eatontown, a brutal assault was committed upon Miss Angeline Herbert, a white girl. "Mingo Jack," an old negro, was firmly believed to have been the perpetrator. Public indignation was very great, and one night while the negro was in the lock-up, the door was bursted in and the next morning Mingo

Jack's lifeless remains were dangling at a ropes end. It now transpires that one Richard Kearney, a negro under sentence of death for murder at Freehold, N. J. makes a confession of the crime commit ted on the white girl, for which the other negro was lynehed.
