eases. Habitual beer-drinkers seem to have no constitutional power to resist disease."

Dr. W. T. Ridenour : "Beer-drinkers are very liable to die of pneumonia, and when a confirmed beer-drinker takes pneumonia he dies."

Dr. S. S. Lungren : "Every part of the body of a confirmed beer-drinker becomes loaded down with morbid and poisonous matter and every part will soon fall into ruin and decay."

Dr. J. T. Woods: "Lager beer, if Liniment sold is warranted by the used at all, should be used as a medicine, as ipecac, quinine, rhubarb and

Dr. C. A. Kirkley: "There is no more fruitful source of Bright's disease than beer-drinking. The evil effects are not confined to the consumers of the beverage, but are transmitted to their offspring."

Dr. C. W. Chapman ; "I regard beer as harmful as ardent spirits, brandy and whisky, as it produces fatty degeneration of the heart, liver and kidnevs."

Dr. G. A. Collamore: "Beer-drinking produces a morbid effect upon the heart, lungs, brain, stomach, liver and kidneys. The brain is kept in a hyperemic condition which prevents normal cerebration or the accurate use of the mental faculties."

Dr. W. H. Mays, Superintendent of the Stockton, Ia., Insane Asylum, in his ninth biennial report to the State Board of Health has the following on beer drinking: "Nothing will lower the vital forces so steadily and surely, nothing will degenerate the organic tissues so rapidly as the use of beer every day and year after year. It coarsens a man in appearance, in morals, in mental fibre, in physical constitution. It is more productive of brutality, sensualism, and the lower forms of crime than is whisky-drinking. It is the beverage of the Bill Sykes, of the vulgar ruffian, the bestial tramp."

Liquor is said to have been the cause of the recent death of Henry C. Spaulding, the inventor of "Spaulding's Glue." At one time he was worth $80,000, but his deathbed was in an almehouse.
