An Important Matter.

It should not be forgotten that Thursday, September 6th, is the last day for the registration of voters. Every person who intends to vote should see that his name is on the registry list, and the best way to attend to the matter is to do it personally. Young members of the party should be particular to see that they have not been missed. County Committeemen and Vigilance Committees should look up all Republicans and see that they are registered. Do not neglect to attend to this matter promptly.

The excursion of the Methodist and Presbyterian Sunday Schools to Chautauqua as previously announced was made on last Friday. Nearly 250 persons, or thereabouts-maybe a few more or less-took in the trip. But for the rain that was coming down in big drops and plenty of them when folks woke up in the merning to get ready to go, and didn't stop only for a few short minutes now and then until way along in the forenoon, many more than did go would have gone. The weather looked discouraging when the start was made and didn't change its "borrid front" to any appreciable degree until the train bearing the persistently jolly and obstinately happy pleasure seekers came almost within sight of the low bills encircling the basin where lay Lake Chautauqua like a jewel of first-rate water, as it is. Then the heart of the weather clerk softened, the clouds broke apart and winked and blinked at each other across strips of blue sky out of which the burglars last Sunday night, they the sunshine beamed with the benignibaving attempted to effect an entrance ty of a great character conferring a beautiful blessing on a worthy object for a blessed purpose.

There was no delay on the road. The train was pushed right along. Had the conductor in charge of the train been christened Eli he couldn't have done better. The only thing approximating a "hitch" in the whole affair was the delay in waiting for a steamer to cross the lake after getting off the train at Mayville. A small boat was waiting, but it wouldn't carry all the party, and so we had to await and a stove in it," as one of the little big boat lay at the dock before starting long enough for lunch, and what an onslaught on "vittles and sich." The ride across the lake to Point Chautauqua, and then on over to the Assembly grounds, was delightful: everybody enjoyed it. The Late John Cobb.

DIED-In Frewsburg, N. Y., on the 15th day of August, 1888, John Cobb, aged 73

Such is the record awaiting all humanity, with the obvious changes. A more extended notice would seem to be demanded in the present instance, for the reason that he has been a conspicuous figure in a large circle of acquaintances.

He was born at Bakersfield, Vt., May

3d, 1815, of Massachusetts parents, and was the youngest and survivor of six girls and 5 boys. His parents immigrated into the town of Gerry, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in 1818, with that large influx of settlers from the Eastern States that set in soon after the war of 1812. At that time Gerry was comparatively a wilderness without roads-without schools, or any o the advantages, possessed by the present generation, and the settlers endured hard ships and privations of which the people of to-day can form no adequate conception. A densely wooded country inhabited by wild beasts, and wild men, who had recently surrendered the title to their lands under compulsion, were the conditions that confronted the early settlers; conditions that they accepted with a spirit born of intrepidity. Under these adverse surroundings the subject of this notice grew up to manhood, without educational advantages, save those afforded in a log school house two or three months in the year. Poverty was his mother, and his master was necessity; and under these potent factors, was possibly evolved that enterprising and indomitable spirit that characterized his whole life. The desire to better his condition manifested itself before he had reached his majority, in the purchase of lumber of one kind or another, and transporting it down the navigable streams to the lower market. The profits arising from these transactions were never large, and often losses resulted. But lumbering or clearing land for agricultural purposes, was the only business presenting itself to men of small means, and to these occupations he devoted himself as best he could, until the year 1837, when he was married to Elsie J. Pearce. This partnership resulted in changing his aspirations for wider fields of enterprise, and four years afterward we find him in the lumber woods of Pennsylvania, at the forks of Tionesta, where now is Lower Sheffield. He remained there but a single year, and moved to Ridgway, on the Clarion river. The vast forests of timber that were then untouched on the Clarion waters, and which have since contributed so largely towards supplying the markets on the Ohio river, were just beginning to invite the attention of the enterprising. He entered gradually into the manufacturing of lumber, increasing his business from year to year. And as his business increased, that wonderful tact and executive talent was developed, that enabled him to oversee and arrange the details of immense operations in manufacturing and getting to market large quantities of lumber. It was upon these waters likewise he became intimately connected in business transactions with Charles Fisher, N. A. Lowry, Josiah Hall, Chapin Hall and Joseph S. Hyde, who were the Napoleans in the lumber trade about that time. These men have in like manner passed away, but have left their testimony in his favor in numerous instances.

Such is the very brief outline of a busy life, extending over a period of more than fifty years, and many incidents might be related connected with his operations that would be interesting. But it will not be through his achievements as an active, untiring business man, that he will be longest remembered. Those who knew him best will revere his memory for his goodness of heart, his kindness to his friends. Under all circumstances, when disasters overtook him, when floods swept away the accumulation of years, when cares and responsibilities, so great that they would have crushed the spirit of almost any other person, came upon him, he was careful to never unload his cares upon his friends, but on the contrary labored to lighten their loads and cheer their pathway throw it the gloom of doubt and uncertainty. As you hopeful and uncom-plaining, never so it ppy as when making every one around him happy, he could have said in a better sense what Pericles in his last illness. "No Athenean has ever put on mourning in consequence of any act of mine."

If it be true, that the measure of our deserts is the amount of happiness we have conferred upon others, he certainly will be deserving of a great deal. And it certainly is true that our greatest happiness consists in the reflection of having done some good to our neighbor and friends. Perhaps this may account for the fact that under all circumstances he was the same kind friend, the same indulgent father, the same loving husband, whose buoyant spirits dispelled all care, whose whole aim seemed to be to make the world happier for his having lived in it. Notwithstanding his education was limited, his strong common sense and accurate observation, made him more than an ordinary man. He possessed more courage than politeness, more strength than polish; he loved the truth for truth's sake, and the right because it was right; he thought the best Christian was he who did the most good to his fellows. He died as he had livedloving his friends, but not hating his ene mies, and detesting sur erstition. His long illness, which commenced in 1886, was born with uncomplaining fortitude, and he lies buried with his parents and seven of the family, in the cemetery at Bucklen's Corners, N. Y. [The above is furnished by a lifelong
