Whole Cities and Towns Swept Away in a Flood.

The Awful Calamity at Johnstown, Pa.

Loss of Life Estimated at 5,000 to 10,000.

Friday, May 31, of the year of our Lord 1889 will bereafter be associated with the most appalling disaster that the history of the North American continent has yet recorded. So sudden, so awful, so great in its fatality the tragedy in the Conemaugh valley overshadows any horror of a similar character ever recorded so as to render one and all insignificant in comparison.

The city of Johnstown is the central figure of an awful panorama of death witnessed in the Conemaugh valley.

The Conemaugh Creek rises in the western part of Cambria county south two form the Conemaugh River. It then flows northwesterly until it crosses the county line, then westerly forming the boundary between Indiana and Westmoreland counties. Meeting the Loyalhanna at Saltsburg the two form above Pittsburgh.

Johnstown is situated in the S. W. part of Cambria county, at the junction of Conemaugh Creek and Stony Creek, at the head of Conemaugh
