Ar the election held in Rhode Island last Thursday to test the sentiment of the people on the repeal of the prohibitory amendment to its constitution, passed in 1886, the result favored the repeal by a vote of 28,449 to 9,858, or 5,459 more than the necessary three fifths to carry the repealing amendment.

He was a member of the assembly of his state for four years and has held all the important offices in his county. Mr. Agnew is a lawyer by profession, and his appointment is another recognition of that sturdy Scotch Irish stock of which Chief ties:

Justice Agnew is a part. The above is from the Washington Star of the 19th inst. As we have said before the above mentioned important position has been tendered to Mr. Agnew for some time and we are glad to know that he has accepted and learn that he returns to Washington to enter upon the duties of the office about the first of July. No Republican in northwestern Penn'a is better or more favorably known than J. B. Agnew. His record in many official positions in this County and State are a sufficient guarantee that his official acts in Washington will meet with general approval. That Burl will be a favorite there as he is at home admits of no question. We are only too sorry to lose him from our midst during the term of his incumbency. Much credit for his selection is no doubt due to Senators Quay and Cameron and other prominent State officials, but from what we can learn Postmaster General Wanamaker has performed the lion's share in the whole matter which will give him many warm friends in this section of Pennsylvania. We only hope he will do as well by our old friend Capt. S. R. Stratton, of Clarion county, who we understand is a candidate for reinstatement to his old position as Chief of the Registered Letter Division of the P. O. Dept., which he filled with so much honor and ability for so many years and he is also eligible without examination under the recent modification by the President of Rule 10 of the Civil Service whice abolishes the time limit in cases of discharged veterans for political purposes. In commenting on the selection of Mr. Agnew we do not propose to write his obituary at this time but we are ready to wager considerable that before a great many moons come and go the subject of this article will yet enjoy 285,850. higher official honors or else there is no reliance to be placed on the indi- "The Santary Value of Straw Hats is Concation of the starry firmament in the flowery month of June.

JOHNSTOWN.

Johnstown, June 24.-A sweeping fire broke out in the First ward at 12:50 this afternoon. The flames spread rapidly, and at 1 o'clock 20 houses were burning. Among the buildings burning is the First ward school bouse. All the engines in the place have been called out, and the most intense excitement prevails. Nearly all the houses burned were more or less destroyed by the flood.

THE MARECHAL NEIL ROSE.

The Marechal Neil is one of the love-liest roses of its kind, the noisette, and in its name and origin there is one the hitherto unwritten romances of the Court of France in the Second Empire. after the battle of the Boyne in 1690, as did the MacMahons, the Fitz Jameses and others, who are now Irish in nothing but their names. General Neil had commanded and fought his corps with such eminent ability and distin-guished courage, that when peace was made, with his countryman and friend, to France. He had been terribly wounded, and had suffered besides from es. For months he was between life and death, with only his surgeon,

One day a peasant woman brought him a whole basket of wild roses from the Campagna region. General Neil had always been extremely fond of roses, and most of these were new to him, and thus served to amuse him un-til they were withered. He observed, however, that one particular shoot had not faded and died like the others, but had grown into a beautiful green plant of perhaps ten inches in length. When he looked to see why this one had grown and the others faded, he found that a bit of the root had been cut away with the flower, which was of a palish yellow hue. Scarcely knowing why, Neil determined to keep the shoot so curiously preserved. When he return-ed to Paris he placed the young shoot with an expert floriculturist, and next Spring it bore four of the loveliest buds in the world, of a pale-lemon-tinge. At that time General Neil was sent for to receive the highest military sion as Marshal of France, in presence of three emperors and all the kings in Europe worth naming. After the solemn ceremony was ended, and he wore for the first time in that day the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor, he went to the reception of the Em-press—who was splendid in her per-fection of beauty—and presented to her a curious yellowish rose of perfect form and perfume, but different from any

she had ever seen, and told her its sto-And so you have proved the truth of what the old abbe used to say in his dreadfully tedious sermons at Pau about easting the bread on the waters,1 said the Empress (who, like Queen Elizabeth of blessed memory, "loved a fine man,") to the handsomest and most daring, as well as one of the ablest of the Marshals of the Second Empire. "Dear me, but he was tedi-ous, that good abbe," continued Her Majesty, with the softest look of retrospection in her lovely dark eyes. "Now, Monsieur le Marechal," said she, vivaciously, "I shall christen this rose

"Do so," said the Franco-Irish soldier, bowing very low, but flashing at her a glance of profound admiration so warm that it deepened her color a little as they stood alone, for, though the great salon of the palace was crowded, no one dared interrupt a tetea-tete, which she herself had allowed, between the Empress and the handsomest General of his day.

Lightly putting the rose to her lips, she said: "It is named the Marechal Neil, for the soldier sans peur et sans reproche, as gallant in the salon as he is on the battlefield."

This gracious speech went straight to the great soldier's Irish heart.
"You will wear it to-night. Your Majesty, will you not, and afterward give it to me to keep, this happy rose?"

"Monsieur le Marechal!" said the Empress, with great dignity. "I pray your forgiveness," he answer-

"No, no, I am not as angry as I ought to be," she replied; "hut—but people might hear," and with a Parthian glance she departed. Four days thereafter, Colonel Lewal, then Neil's chief of staff, but not long since Minister of War for the French Republic, observed his chief take a surreptitious rosebud out of an envelope he had just received, and lock it up in a private drawer.—Leslies Popular Month-

The Craze for Hairpins.

Unquestionable I have never seen such a rage for ornamental hairpins of every description as there seems to be at present, says a writer in the Jewel er's Weekly. And the amount of artis-tic work that is being lavished on these ornaments is something remarkable Some ladies seem to have a regular mania for them, and are not contented with less than a score or so.

Pretty Emma Juch, the operatic prima donna, owns an unrivaled collection of hairpins; not the black wire pins, so humbly useful in buttoning boots and picking locks, but hairpins idealized, pins dainty and bejeweled, such pins as those with which the protty girl at once fastens and ornaments her locks, and which she makes her chief pet and fetich. Mme. Kallisch, who was transformed from Fraulein Lilli Lehman under such romantie circumstances last spring, is also a victim of the hairpin mania. When she sailed for Europe a few weeks ago she carried with her from two hundred to three hundred ornaments, an accumulation second only to that of Miss Juch.

The elaborate-carved shell combs, which enjoyed a revival a couple of years ago, have given place to shell pins with comb tops equally large and even more intricately cut is leaf, flower, and geometrical designs. Some of these are gold-rimmed, banded and ornamented until they make very costly bits of jewelry.

The pin which the fair Parisian likes best just now has a shell foundation, with a spray of leaves of fine flowers in cut steel for an ornament on top. These plus are seen here-abouts to some extent, but the New York girl likes many other kinds better. For instance, she takes very kindly to the mixture of torcaise shell and amber, for the body of the pin being shell, with a bunch of currants or some such small ball-like design in amber for the head. A shell pin with garnet orna-mentation is as general a favorite as anything made.

The young girl's pin for all informal occasions is the silver pin. With coils, twists, loops, and all manner of simple designs in white or oxidized silver she fastens her beight hair. Silver pins are summer pins because they offer such an opportunity to the summer
