One Way to Use Old Corks,

An old bottle cork may seem to most people to be an useless article. But there are few things which the ingenu-ity of man can not turn to some good use. Seaweed for many ages has been believed by all mankind to be quite worthless, as we may judge by the name itself; but modern chemistry has discovered that it is very valuable. While as to corks, it is true that negro-minstrels, and, I might add, many small boys, use them for blackening their faces, and to make imitation mus-taches. But there are many other ways of turning these articles to ac-ways of turning these articles to account, at slight expense.

A cork, if cut into a tube or small brick, bears a close resemblance in miniature to many kinds of stone. When a number of these are combined they look like old specked and indented masonry. They abound in brown, or brownish-gray spots and little cavities. Therefore, if you take a number of such cork-bricks, and construct from them a model of a small bouse with care, it will present a very pretty apcare, it will present a very pretty ap-pearance. They are easily fastened to-gether by passing wire or small rods through them or by glucing them to-

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed invessantly and could not sleep. She bought of her a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured.
