

BOROUGH OFFICERS.

Borough Officers: Burgess—J. R. Clark, Councilmen—North ward, R. M. Hermon, H. M. Foreman, Patrick Joyce, South ward, J. C. Snowdon, S. H. Haslet, Ed. Holman, Justice of the Peace—J. F. Propper, S. S. Sully, Constable and Collector—S. S. Canfield, School Directors—G. W. Robinson, A. B. Kelly, E. L. Davis, D. S. Knox, D. W. Clark, J. T. Brennan.

FOREST COUNTY OFFICERS.

Member of Congress—James Kerr, Member of Senate—J. H. Wilson, Assembly—Charles A. Randall, President Judge—W. D. Brown, Associate Judges—John A. Propper, John R. White, Treasurer—Jas. B. Hagerty, Prothonotary, Register & Recorder, &c.—Calvin M. Acker, Sheriff—Geo. W. Sawyer, Commissioners—Wm. D. S. Shields, C. F. Ledebur, J. J. Parsons, County Superintendent—Geo. W. Kerr, District Attorney—P. M. Clark, County Auditors—E. L. Jones, R. Z. Gillispie, Wm. Blum, County Surveyor—J. F. Propper, Coroner—Dr. A. E. Stonefield, County Jailers—R. L. Jones, R. Z. Gillispie, Wm. Blum.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

OLIVE LODGE, No. 557, F. & A. M., Stated Meetings held at Odd Fellows Hall the first Monday of each month. T. J. PAYNE, W. M., T. B. COBB, Sec'y.

WASHINGTON CAMP, No. 420, P. O. S. of A., meets every Monday evening in Dale Hall. White degree conferred 1st and 3d Mondays of each month. H. H. SHOEMAKER, Pres., T. B. COBB, R. S.

FOREST LODGE, No. 184, A. O. U. W., Meets every Friday Evening in Haslet Hall, Tionesta. J. E. WENK, M. W., J. R. CLARK, Recorder.

CHAPT. GEORGE STOW POST, No. 274, G. A. R., Meets on the first Wednesday in each month, in Odd Fellows Hall, Tionesta. Pa. D. BLACK, Commander.

BOARD OF EXAMINING SURGEONS for Forest County, S. S. Towler, M. D., President; J. W. Morrow, M. D., Secretary; J. B. Siggins, M. D., Treasurer. The Board will meet in Dr. Morrow's office, Tionesta, on the third Wednesday of each month, at 10 o'clock, a. m.

AGNEW & CLARK, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Office next door to P. O., Tionesta, Pa. J. P. AGNEW, P. M. CLARK, District Attorney. Mr. Clark is Agent for a number of reliable Fire Insurance Companies.

E. L. DAVIS, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Tionesta, Pa. Collections made in this and adjoining counties.

F. E. BIBLE, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Office in Kepler Block, Room 9, Tionesta, Pa.

LAWRENCE HOUSE, Tionesta, Pa., Harry Maze, Proprietor. This house is centrally located, everything new and well furnished. Superior Accommodations and strict attention given to guests. Vegetables and Fruits of all kinds served in their season. Sample room for Commercial Agents.

CENTRAL HOUSE, Tionesta, Pa., O. C. Brownell, Proprietor. This is new house, and has just been fitted up for the accommodation of the public. A portion of the patronage of the public is solicited. 45-ly.

CENTRAL HOUSE, OIL CITY, PA., W. H. BOPH, Proprietor. The largest, best located and furnished House in the City. Near Union Depot.

J. B. Siggins, M. D., Physician, Surgeon & Druggist, TIONESTA, PA.

J. W. Morrow, M. D., Physician & Surgeon, Tionesta, Pa. Office in Tionesta, Pa. Office and residence two doors north of Lawrence House. Office hours 7 to 8 A. M., and 11 to 12 M.; 2 to 3 and 6 to 7 P. M. Sundays, 9 to 10 A. M.; 2 to 3 and 6 to 7 P. M. may-18-91.

JAS. T. BRENNAN, REAL ESTATE, RENTING AND COLLECTING AGENCY, TIONESTA, PA.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE PROPER ASSESSMENT OF LANDS AND THE PAYMENT OF TAXES. ALSO TO THE PURCHASE AND SALE OF REAL ESTATE, AND TO THE RENTING AND MANAGEMENT OF THE SAME.

Church and Sabbath School. Presbyterian Sabbath School at 9:45 a. m.; M. E. Sabbath School at 10:30 a. m. Preaching in M. E. Church every Sabbath evening by Rev. Rumberger. Preaching in the P. M. Church every Sabbath evening at the usual hour. Rev. A. D. Gaines, Pastor. Services in the Presbyterian Church every Sabbath morning and evening, Rev. J. V. McAninch officiating.

LOCAL AND MISCELLANEOUS.

—Is this dry enough for you? —Oil market closed yesterday 82. —The farmers say it's getting almost too dry for easy plowing. —Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lawrence, on Sunday last, a son. —Ice a half inch in thickness formed in this place Sunday night last. —California prunes, 5 cents per pound, at Lawrence & Smearbaugh's. —Bass fishing will be legal on June 1st. Not till June 1st, boys; recollect. —Chas. Davis is home from medical school at Philadelphia, for the summer vacation. —T. B. Machesney, of Neiltown, gave the REPUBLICAN a pleasant call yesterday. —Rev. S. Sager will occupy the pulpit of the F. M. Church next Sabbath evening. —Messrs. Allison and Loudon, of Nebraska, gave the REPUBLICAN a social call last Friday. —Fine line of Straw Goods, Hats, &c., just opened at D. Barnett's Famous Low Price Store. —It has looked like rain at different times during the past two weeks, but "all signs fall in dry weather," as they say.

—J. N. Heath, of Starr, is this week announced as a candidate for Jury Commissioner, subject to Republican usage. —A new stock and fine assortment of Ladies' Shoes just opened at Lawrence & Smearbaugh's. Marked down to bottom figures. —Treasurer Hagerty has moved his family into the Hickling house, where they will be pleasantly domiciled for the next three years. —Mr. M. Cox and wife, of Boston, are now stopping at the Central House, and expect to spend the summer in our pleasant borough. —Just received at the Famous Low Price Store, a new stock of embroideries and white goods, which will be sold at prices to suit the times. —C. M. Shawkey came up from Washington during the week to make his parents a visit, and see old friends. Curt. is looking well and feeling happy as usual. —Jimmie, the three-year old boy of Z. T. Shriver, burned his right arm badly this morning while playing around a burning rubbish pile in the back yard. —A nice line of Spring and Summer Calicoes of the latest patterns, and a good assortment of straw hats will now be found at Lawrence & Smearbaugh's. —The teachers in the Clarion Normal School take a personal interest in the welfare of the students. This accounts in part for the good feeling pervading the institution.

—Mrs. J. M. Mintz is over from Titusville for a few days' stay with her husband. It is Mr. M.'s intention to take up his residence here if he can secure a suitable house. —This office is now supplied with a number of fine horse cuts, and is prepared to print extra nice horse bills on short notice and at reasonable prices. Owners of good stock are invited to call and leave their orders. —Fred Morgan was up from Oil City last Thursday on his annual trouting excursion, and scooped in a good lot of 'em. Fred is a good, honest fisherman, who never lies about his string; he could, but he won't. —We observe that H. L. Miller, a former popular teacher in this county, is announced as a candidate for superintendent of Schools in Clarion county, and we join his many old friends over here in hoping he'll get there. —In the line of Men's and Boys' Clothing don't forget that Lawrence & Smearbaugh keep a complete selection of strictly first class goods. In boys' suits their line is second to none in point of beauty and wearing quality. They ask an inspection before purchasing elsewhere, and will guarantee every garment. —In Boots and Shoes D. Barnett's Famous Low Price Store takes the lead. Just come and try a pair of our shoes for $1.25. Cheap at $1.50. It.

—H. J. Hopkins & Co. this week appear in a new spring ad. in which they tell the people what a splendid stock of goods for the season can be seen at their store, and invite a full inspection of the same, together with prices, &c. —T. F. Ritchey Esq., has returned to Tionesta after a year's residence in Oil City. We understand he will purchase from the Odd Fellows, the Ford lot next to Dr. Morrow's residence, and will build a dwelling house there this summer. —All interested in base ball matters are requested to meet at the Gas office, to-morrow, Thursday evening, for the purpose of considering the organization of a club for the summer, and the rental of a suitable ground. A good attendance is desired. —Oil City has decided on an all-round reformation, remarks the Franklin News. They are to stop Sunday ball-playing, shut up the speak-easies, squelch the poker joints, break up corner loafing, and restrain the Sabbath beer and 7 up parties on Holiday run. —The Democratic Committee of this county met in the Partridge building yesterday afternoon, in response to the call of Chairman Haslet, and decided on the 31st of May next, as the date for holding the Democratic primaries. —Charlie Killmer slashed his right foot severely Monday morning at the boat scuffard across the creek. He was scoring a gunnel splice when his ax struck a knot turning the blade into the ball of his great toe and inflicting a wound which will lay him off for some time. —Clarion Presbytery, of which the church at this place is a part, meets at DuBois to-day. Amongst other important matters that will come up at this session is the question of revision of the Confession of Faith, and it is believed this Presbytery will vote against the proposed revision. —All Justices having criminal transcripts are requested to file them with the Clerk of Courts at once, as it is of importance to all parties in the saving of time, and avoiding delay in the matter of witnesses. Besides being required by Act of Assembly, So quoth District Attorney Clark. —In the list of students attending the Clarion Normal we note these from Forest county: Mary Dankle, Alice and David F. Crawford, Pigeon; Mary B. Merillott, Mary Rohrer, Maude Taylor, Bertha Wilkinson, J. D. Richards, Wm. Stoughton, Marienville; Sadie Ittel, Cooksburg; G. C. Reemer, Brookstown. —"Louva, the Pauper," was very creditably rendered by the young ladies of the Y. W. C. T. U. and their gentlemen friends at Lauder's opera house last evening, and the well filled house was highly pleased with the performance, every character being exceptionally well represented. When the Y's give another entertainment they can depend on a good house.

—Fires are already becoming numerous in the surrounding forests. On Monday the side hill opposite town received a very severe scorping, supposed to have originated by a spark from a passing locomotive. Talk about game protection, one of these fires at this particular season will destroy a hundred pheasants where the most persistent pot-hunter would not get a feather, and the law respecting forest fires ought to be rigidly enforced. —Stewarts Run. Frank Thomson and Dick Davis of Tionesta, visited Frank's parents last Sabbath. Josie Zahner, who has been staying at J. G. Bronley's expects to return to Mr. Vanderlin's to-morrow. Last week, while Mr. Aiken was out chopping wood, their house took fire, and when Mr. Aiken went home to get his dinner his house with all its contents was burned up. No. 1, on the Fair, came in last week, and is doing 4 barrels, black oil. No. 7, on the Jocelya came in this morning and filled up 250 feet while drilling through the sand. It is good for 10 barrels black oil, and would pump 5 barrels in first sand. Rig No. 8, is being built this week. Some of the farmers have sowed their oats. Chas. Zahner was home last Sabbath. Mr. L. A. Clary of Pleasantville, made us a call to-day. Mr. Butler is around to-day seeing the voters of Stewarts Run. April 22. MCGINTY.

—The Famous Low Price Store wants the public to know that in Gent's Furnishing Goods, Pants, &c., we will not be undersold. Prices on Pants all the way from 40 cents up to $5.00. —The Clarion correspondent of the Derrick of this morning, says: "On Monday the Orphans' Court of this county granted an order to George F. Kribbs, guardian of the minor children of George J. Lacey, deceased, to join with the adult owners in a sale of the Lacey timber lands, comprising about 6,000 acres, 1,000 of which lie in Clarion county, the remainder being in Forest, for which the court of that county granted a decree of sale some time ago. The purchasers are Colonel C. W. Stone, A. J. Hazeltine and L. R. Freeman, all of Warren, and the total consideration for the entire body of lands is $110,000."

—Elder Latshaw preached a very able sermon here last week, while holding quarterly meeting. Mr. Sibley and family, from Brockwayville, Jefferson Co., are on their way here where they will reside for some time. Mr. S. is W. H. Frost's wood boss. S. Crawford is filling his store with a full line of Spring goods. Men are in demand here now; it will take two hundred men for the two firms here in town. The oil well belonging to W. H. Frost and others will strike the sand this week. Frank Crain, who has been sick for some time, was on the streets to-day. The writer of these items has been rather too much occupied the last week to give his attention to news-gathering. April 21. HUNGRY. OBITUARY. Doreas M. Jones, wife of Isaac Jones, of Fagundus, Warren Co., Pa., was born Nov. 17, 1837, and died April 13, 1890, aged 52 years, 4 months and 26 days, leaving a husband and ten children to mourn their loss. Sister Jones was not only a member of the M. E. Church, but she was a Christian, and although a severe sufferer with inflammatory rheumatism for over a year, she was resigned and submissive to the will of Him who doeth all things well. She had a bright experience and a happy death. She has gone home to be forever with the Lord. Truly may her children say, "I bowed down heavily as one that mourneth for his mother," but "I sorrow not even as others which have no hope," for I know that "blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." The children, five of whom are married, were all at the funeral except one, who could not be present on account of personal sickness. Her remains were followed to their last resting place in Fagundus cemetery by a large concourse of friends and neighbors, who will sadly miss her, but they have the consolation that she is forever with Jesus of whom she spoke so often. C. R. THOMPSON. Eighty-Third Battle-Flag. "My Story of the War," by that famous war nurse and gifted writer, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, A. D. Worthington & Co., publishers, Hartford, Conn., contains, among its many other elegant engravings, a colored plate representing the tattered remains of the 83d regimental battle flag, and gives this bit of history in connection with it, which we are sure will be read with interest by the many survivors in this section of that gallant regiment. The book is now in the hands of subscribers, who are delighted with its handsome get-up and general excellence. In May, 1861, Governor Curtin addressed a message to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, informing that body that the "Society of the Cincinnati of Pennsylvania" had presented to him the sum of five hundred dollars, to be used towards arming and equipping Pennsylvania soldiers. The governor asked that the manner of its use should be directed by statute. The "Society of the Cincinnati" was originally composed of surviving soldiers of the Revolution, who pledged lasting friendship and aid to each other. Washington was at its head, and Millin, Wayne, Reed, and Cadwalader were members of it. The gift thus tendered to the state of Pennsylvania was accepted by the Legislature for the state, and was devoted to the purchase of a battle flag to be carried at the head of one of the Pennsylvania regiments. The flag thus acquired was presented to the 83d Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was presented to them while in camp at Hall's Hill, Va., by Hon. Edgar Cowan, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, who represented Governor Curtin on this occasion. This flag was borne in the most desperate fighting at Gaines' Mill, where the commander of the regiment was killed. A few days later, at Malvern Hill, the 83d held a vital point in the line, and lost one hundred and forty-four men in the struggle. Corporal Ames, the color-bearer, was killed by a bullet, which at the same time pierced and splintered the flag-staff. The flag fell, and he fell upon it. It was picked up by Sergeant Alexander Rogers, who waved it over his head and gallantly advanced to the front of the regiment. During the most desperate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

Jury List, May Term, 1890. GRAND JURORS. Anderson, W. L., ship builder, Hickory. Armstrong, J. M., laborer, Barnett. Carlson, Charles, railroad boss, Harmony. Chadwick, J. R., carpenter, Borough. Church, J. M., farmer, Hickory. Cameron, T. Y., Jr., laborer, Jenks. Dahle, Allan, laborer, Tionesta tp. Dodge, W. M., laborer, Jenks. Evans, Gust., clerk, Hickory. Hepler, Wm., farmer, Tionesta tp. Ittel, George, farmer, Barnett. Knight, Peter, farmer, Barnett. Middleton, C. R., laborer, Hickory. Muse, J. B., editor, Borough. Mong, Allison, farmer, Tionesta tp. Ray, W. H., farmer, Barnett. Ray, S. B., farmer, Jenks. Schwab, Joseph, farmer, Hickory. Southworth, Charles, sawyer, Kingsley. Smith, Sidney, laborer, Harmony. Whitehill, Wesley, farmer, Kingsley. White, Edward, laborer, Green. Warner, Oscar, blacksmith, Jenks. Winegard, Fred., farmer, Green. PETIT JURORS. Alt, J. R., boat builder, Green. Agnew, Pritner, drayman, Borough. Brecht, John, farmer, Hickory. Blocher, P. C., farmer, Tionesta tp. Burehard, Lewis, lumberman, Jenks. Blausner, E. S., laborer, Green. Confer, J. C., barber, Jenks. Crain, Frank, lumberman, Howe. Davis, J. D., clerk, Borough. Dale, J. T., lumberman, Borough. Dawson, W. R., farmer, Harmony. Fleming, E. E., laborer, Harmony. Fulmer, G. W., farmer, Barnett. Fitzgerald, Thomas, farmer, Barnett. Foshal, J. F., laborer, Green. Gillespie, C. F., foreman, Howe. Grifflin, C. F., farmer, Kingsley. Hettish, Jonathan, laborer, Jenks. Hummell, L. R., laborer, Jenks. Hunter, Samuel E., laborer, Hickory. Hunter, Wm., laborer, Borough. Irwin, J. M., laborer, Jenks. Kiestler, Lewis, farmer, Hickory. McCullough, J. M., laborer, Green. McAninch, J. V., minister, Borough. Merillott, Jacob, 2d, laborer, Jenks. McIntyre, James, farmer, Harmony. Nash, Frank, lumberman, Howe. Nellis, C. F., laborer, Barnett. Paup, G. R., farmer, Harmony. Rudolph, R., laborer, Kingsley. Settle, H. S., oil producer, Harmony. Silpe, H. K., farmer, Jenks. Snowden, J. C., blacksmith, Borough. Small, Andrew, laborer, Kingsley. Thompson, J. N., laborer, Green. Walters, Daniel, stonemason, Borough. Whitten, H. C., surveyor, Borough. Work, Josiah, lumberman, Barnett. Watson, J. R., hotel keeper, Jenks. Whitehouse, Chas., lumberman, Kingsley. Zahniser, W. N., laborer, Harmony.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 1864, the 83d was ordered to storm entrenched works strongly held by the enemy. The charge was fearlessly made, and some of the men succeeded in crossing the enemy's works, where they fell to bayoneting the foe; but the odds were too great, and the regiment was forced to fall back, with a loss of over one hundred and fifty killed and wounded—some of the bravest and most daring going down in this ill-advised charge. The flag on this occasion was carried by Corporal Vogus, who had rescued it when Sergeant Rogers fell at the Wilderness, three days before. While the regiment was charging up to the breastworks, he received a severe wound in the side, and fell with the flag. Corporal John Lillibridge of the color guard immediately seized it, and was about to carry it forward when Vogus recovered and, again taking the flag, pressed forward and planted it on the breastworks of the enemy. In a few moments afterwards he was shot through the breast. Fearing that the flag might be captured, and more careful for it than for himself, he seized it while he was in the act of falling, and hurled it to the rear, where it was caught by Corporal Dan Jones. Jones was shortly afterwards wounded himself, and, while getting off the field, handed the flag to a soldier of the 44th New York, and it was soon afterwards returned to the regiment. The number of battles in which this flag was carried, as published in orders and recorded in the Official Army Registers of 1885, is twenty-five.

perate fighting Sergeant William Wittich of the 83d, seeing one of the enemy's battle flags lying upon the field, in advance of our lines, dashed out and secured the flag. For this act of heroism he was promoted to a lieutenant, by order of General Porter, commanding the corps. Sergeant Rogers bore the old flag gloriously through a dozen bloody fights, and was finally killed in the first day's battle in the Wilderness, on the 5th of May, 1864. Finally, a new staff, and eventually a new flag, took the place of the old. It was still, however, the same valor-inspiring emblem, and wherever its star-lit folds could be discerned amid the smoke and carnage of the fray there gathered the true and tried hearts, whose every beat was responsive to its safety and honor. In the battle of Laurel Hill, on the 8th of May, 18