The Republican Club Convention.

The Convention of the Republican Clubs at Cincinnati last week was an enthusiastic one. It has given notice to the country that the party is on deck and ready for the battle that will come next year. There were no laggards. There was the greatest confidence in the result. The proceedings, too, were discreet. The resolutions pointed the way to the national platform, and especially to the subject of restricted immigration. The Tariff bill and the reciprocity plan will go hand in hand to battle with free traders, but running through all the issues like a golden thread will be the purely American policy of the administration of Harrison and Blaine. The progressive steps of the Department of State will figure largely in the next campaign.

The convention was not held to pick out candidates or even show the way. It was a wise step to fix the date of next year's gathering subsequent to that of the National Convention. It would not do to allow such an important organization as this League of Clubs to split in advance on candidates. There would be danger in a convention preceding the nominating body. But after the nominations have been made the clubs will get together and ratify with all the old time en thusiasm of the Republican party.

The selection of James-why most of the papers should call him John we are at a loss to understand-S. Clarkson as President of the League, means that the organization will be placed upon a campaign basis, and that it will do active work in the great struggle.
