In the State Supreme Court Monday, the application for a change of venue from Crawford county in the case of the Delamaters, the bankers, who failed last year, was refused by Justice Paxson. The grounds for the application were the prejndice of the depositors and the inflammatory articles published in the newspapers after the failure.

There is a most peculiar question growing out of the settlement of an estate, the owner of which perished in the Johnstown flood, before the Courts of Cambria county. A husband died not long before the flood, leaving his estate, by will to his wife, who lost her life, as did her children in that terrible disaster. Now the question Sam Sullinger, who had his leg is to be decided, who shall get the estate? of people perish in a flood the stronger is the last to die. The brothers and sisters of the woman in this case claim the estate Dr. E. Smith, of Whig Hill, had as her heirs, on the presumption that she died last, but she had a son 17 years old whom the relations on the father's side insist lived longer than his mother. The points are all novel and will require rare judgment in disposing of them, and of course it will be carried to the highest court of appeals.

The Blizzard says, the latest report of burglaries in the recent series of such reports, comes faom McKeesport, where two residences were entered and a considerable amount of cash and jewelry was stolen. There appears to be good ground for believing that within the past two weeks representatives of a regular gang of thieves have started from Southern New York and taken a foraging trip down through Pennsylvania. As heretofore recorded, burglaries have been committed during that time at Olean, Tidioute, Tionesta, Cochranton, Franklin, Rouseville, Meadville, Oil City and other towns in this part of the country. The order in which they have been reported and the manner in which they have occurred have indicated, as noted, the work of a gang passing along southward, through local talent has doubtless had a hand in some of them. As no arrest has been effected in connection with these burglaries, it is evident that the perpetrators have either been very lucky of slick hands at their business. If they continue their foraging trip steadily southward, it would seem that the capture of some of them ought to be possible before they get as far as-say Key West, Fla. But it is probable that the robberies at McKeesport, with a few others in that part of the State, will constitute the round up for their present trip, and that they will now turn their atten tion to the disposition of their booty.
