Referring to bimetallism, Major Me-Kinley points out that the adoption of free comage of silver by the United States alone would be to drive farther away the desirable international agreement for the joint use of gold and silver This country would be driven upon a monometallic silver basis and the en lightened nations of Europe, coming into possession of our stock of gold, would pers entitled "England's Fear," in have no incentive to use silver for years rency that would follow the driving out of $500,000,000 of gold from circulation would inflict serious injury upon th country and farmers and laborers would preciated currency, in scant supply, for their products and toil, and suffering from the loss of home markets and lack of employment through the stoppage and crippling of industry.

Passing from the coinage question to the tariff issue the Republican candidate puts aside the problem so clearly solved. for the illustration by contrast. Quoting from the message to Congress by President Harrison in December, 1892, the highest prosperity of the nation is pictured. Quoting from the message of Pres country newspapers from printing it ident Cleveland to the special session of in double column with scare head Congress in August, 1893, the condition of panie and suffering is presented. During those few months a complete change was brought about. The counginning to end. The London correstry had the same currency; it was on the gold standard; it had good money. The loss of confidence was due to a change of admiristration; a change of political control in all departments of the Government and a change to a party that avowed its purpose to strike down protection. What is needed now is to restore confi-
