The Persian Way.

The Shah of Persia may be only in the 2.30 class in matters of diplomacy and he does not dare exactly to slar Queen Victoria of Kaiser William or the back when the potentates chance to meet; but, so far as matters in Per sia are concerned, when the Shah makes a law it is generally enforced to the letter. Persian laws, as tradition informs us, have always had a fashion of getting themselves obeyed and the habit has continued even through the nineteenth century.

A case in point may be cited in the matter of Persian lamb skins. Persian lamb skins are and have long been an article of staple demand in the commercial world. They have commanded such good prices that the supply was hardly equal to the de mand. Consequently, when the Shah one day ordered spring lamb with mint sauce, the cook was obliged to confess that the dish was beyond the command of the Persian treasury. Of course the cook was promptly be headed, but the Shah could not find another cook who would agree to furnish spring lamb whenever his majesty desired to indulge in that delicacy.

This naturally irritated the Shah. After consulting with three or four of his most trusted advisers, who could see no way out of the difficulty and who consequently disappeared from their homes and society in a mysterious manner, the Shah finally decided that the commerce of Persia was threatened by the extinction of Persian sheep and Persian lambs. Consequently, he made a decree that any

This has pulled me down severely, but I am gaining, and I mean to keep the upper hand after this. Strong drink will never catch me in its net again." again.

Business Bars the Drunkard.

"Drunkenness to-day is deemed disreputable in the very quarters where only a little while ago it was looked upon simply as a misfortune," writes Edward W. Bok in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Every line of business shuts its doors absolutely to the drunkard. It has no use for him. Business competition has become so keen that only the men of the steadiest habits can find employment. This fact the ha-bitual induiger in alcoholics has found bitual indulger in alcoholics has found out, and the different 'cure' establishments for drunkerness—and Godeends they are, too, to humanity—are to-day filled with men who have come to a realization of the changed condition. The man of steady habits is the man of the hour, and the drunkard realizes this. In the social world the same think is the world the same thing is true. The exces sive indulgence of even a few years ago would not be tolerated at any dinner today. Society has become intolerant of the behavior which inevitably results from excessive indulgence in drinking, and men realize this. It is bad manners to-day to drink to excess. Good taste is spreading, and moderation is necessarily following."
