The department of agriculture has just put forth its estimate of the wheat crop of the world at 2,640,000,000 bushels, or 169.-000,000 bushels above the average of the last five years and 331,000,000 bushels above the crop of 1897. The supply is not excessive, in view of the small surplus left over from last year, and there is little doubt, according to the New York Journal of Commerce, that there will be a good fereign demand for all the wheat the United States can spare. There are already indications of this fact in the continuance of large exports, the buying for foreign use having been exceptionally large and at advancing prices.
