RELIEF FROM PAIN.

Women Everywhere Express their Gratitude to Mrs. Pinkham.

Mrs. T. A. WALDEN, Gibson, Ga., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:-Before taking your medicine, life was a burden to me. I never saw a well day. At my monthly period I suffered untold misery, and a great deal of the time I was troubled with a severe pain in my side. Before finishing the first bottle of your Vegetable Compound I could tell it was doing me good. I continued its use, also used the Liver Pills and Sanative Wash, and have been greatly helped. I would like to have you use my letter for the benefit of others."

Ars. FLORENCE A. WOLFE, 515 Aulberry St., Lancaster, Ohio, writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:-For two years I was troubled with what the local physicians told me was inflammation of the womb. Every month I suffered terribly. I had taken enough medicine from the doctors to cure anyone, but obtained relief for a short time only. At last I concluded to write to you in regard to my case, and can say that by following your advice I am now pefectly well."

firs. W. R. BATES, flansfield, La., writes: "Before writing to you I suffered dreadfully from painful menstruation, leucorrhœa and sore feeling in the lower part of the bowels. Now my friends want to know what makes me look so well. I do not hesitate one minute in telling them what has brought about this great change. I cannot praise Lydia E. food and warmth; not artificial heat, but warmth that is produced by natural conditions, and in this condition we should remember that food produces warmth. The hungry chicken will puff its feathers out in a loose, shaky sort of a way, and show very plainly by its looks and actions that it suffers from its condition. But on the other hand, the bird that has a crop full of feed, draws its feathers down closely about it, moves and pecks about in a satisfied, happy condition, indicating by its actions that its system is in a natural, healthy

Provide for the hens a place to roost, where the wind cannot strike them, nor the rain or snow reach them, and fortify them with a crop full of grain before they go to roost, and they will be warm and happy, even in a freezing temperature. Food offsets cold, hence we should feed very liberally in cold weather, and never permit our fowls to go to roost at night with an empty crop; for if we do they will lose vitality during the night, and will certainly not be in a condition to lay the next day.

Thoroughbred Fowls. "Where is the value of thoroughbred poultry?" said a farmer to me the other day. "I do not see why common poultry sells at eight cents a pound and thoroughbred at from $2 to $5 a head." Now, why thoroughbreds should be worth more than the common stock found with many of our farmers is easily explained. Many a farmer to-day is keeping from fifty to 100 fowls of the old common varieties or mongrels, inbred and inbred for years. He does not take the interest in them that the man would who has used his hard cash, time and brains to produce pure, profitable, thoroughbred stock; in fact, he takes no interest in them at all, for the sight of them gives him no pleasure. Eggs are few and far between, and he finds no profit in them. But let that same farmer invest in a few thoroughbreds and his mind changes. He smiles when he looks at his flock, and cares for them properly. He takes pride in showing them to his friends, and they yield for him a good supply of eggs, that are uniform in color, and, instead of there being a loss in keeping poultry, he finds that they are paying him better than his mixed-up varieties, or better even than many of his other branches of farming. A small flock of fowls can be kept with very little expense by utilizing the scraps and waste from the pantry, which makes the very best feed for the production of eggs. And I believe that a great many of our farmers would find it more profitable to keep only a small flock of from fifteen to twenty-five fowls than to keep seventy-five or 100, as many of them are doing; or to keep only a few until they know better how to handle them profitably. A few hens will supply the family with an abundance of eggs at a very small expense if they are well kept, and will give their owner much more pleasure in looking after them than if they were three times what he could care for .- V. M. Couch, in Indiana Farmer.

One great trouble in making pea

hay is getting it cured up nicely. Where the crop of vines is very heavy, even when the weather is clear and dry, it has to be turned and stirred; but when once nicely cured it makes the best of hay for all kind of stock, and especially young growing stock and milch cows. Pea vines should be cut, after the morning dew has gone and let lay in the sun long enough to wilt, then hauled in and spread out so they will not lay over six inches to one foot thick over the loft, After these get well dried out fork up in one corner and haul in another lot and treat likewise. By beginning on the crop as soon as it will do to make hay, cutting and curing a load or so at a time, one can soon have a lot of fine feed. Or where there is a large bay shed it can be stacked in a foot or so deep, then cross laid with rails or poles, leaving a space of six inches or so. Then stack in another layer of hay and so on till the shed is full, having the shed so constructed that every eighteen inches you can put in a rail or pole floor or loft that can be readily removed. Begin at the bottom, putting in a layer of hay, then a floor, then hay, then another floor, and so on, till the shed is full, leaving an air space between each layer of hay. Do not put the vines over one foot thick. Where there is neither barn nor shed, pea vines can be cured in hollow stacks. The way to construct a hollow stack is: first lay down two or three big rails or poles, cross lay with rails so as to have the vines six inches to one foot from the ground. Get several small poles and set them up so they will stand out at the base and come together at the top, cone-shaped; tie the tops together. Stack the pea vines round the poles about two feet thick, leaving the center open, so you have air space under and through the center of the stack. Do not make the stack too thick around the poles else it may heat. The vines should be cut and cured in the sun until they are well wilted before stacking. If it should turn wet cover the stack with canvas. Let stand in the stack until well cured, when it should be hauled into shelter. Pea hay will not keep standing out in the weather. The hollow stack is only

A manufacturer of artificial limbs is credited with the statement that amputations tend to enhance vitality. those who have lost an arm or a leg frequently having their lives pro longed and their health improved as a result of the loss. Even the mental forces are represented as being strengthened in cases of amputation. The alleged explanation is that the removal of an important part of the body decreases the demand on the vital forces, and enables them to concentrate more effectually upon what remains. It is not likely, however, that anybody will ever voluntarily sacrifice a leg or an arm for the sake of brightening the wit, or adding a year or two to the length of life.

The Liquor Trade in America. Though there are doubtless many employers of labor on this side, says the Lon-don (England) Hospital, who are affected in their choice of workmen by the fact that in their choice of workmen by the fact that these are or are not abstainers, we do not think that the question has ever been made the subject of a Government inquiry here. Not so in the United States, where the commission appointed by the Government schedules the replies made by no less than 6301 establishments, detailing their practice in regard to the taking on of the 1,745, 923 employes in their service. The employers include individuals or companies engaged in agriculture, manufactures, mining and quarrying, transportation and mining and quarrying, transportation and retail trade. The habits and opinions of these different employers are naturally varied. With 1613 the report is that the habits of the prospective employes regarding drinking are not taken into consideration. tion, but the large majority, viz., 5363, takes means to discover what a man's habits are. Besides those who object to habits are. Besides those who object to their employes taking intoxicants at any time, whether on or off duty, there are a number of employers who insist merely that while actually at work they should abstain from liquor, and also those who, while they do not lay restraint on the ma-jority of their employes, insist on those in jority of their employes, insist on those in responsible positions refraining from drink. Thus in all departments of industry there are a good many firms who demand abstinence from engineers, managers and watchmen. In agriculture stress is laid on teamsters being non-drinkers, for fear of carelessness and cruelty in the handling of cattle on the part of intoxicated men. In mining and quarrying the restriction is ap-plied chiefly to handlers of explosives and to electricians and the like, any blunder on whose part might lead to great injury to their fellow workers, not to speak of damage to property. In transportation almost all branches of the service are, in some companies, forbidden to have any-thing to do with alcohol; trainmen, motor-men, conductors, telegraph operators, electricians, switchmen and pilots.

What Drunkards Cost Boston. What Drunkards Cost Boston.

Last year the city of Boston expended the sum of $115,802 for the support of drunkards in the House of Correction in Suffolk County, according to figures furnished by Penal Institutions Commissioner Marshall. While all of Suffolk County which includes besides Boston the city of Chelsea and the towns of Revere and Winthrop, furnishes inmates for the penal institutions, the entire cost of maintaining stitutions, the entire cost of maintaining the institutions is borne by the city of Boston. This is because the control of the institutions is left wholly to Boston. Commissioner Marshall says of Deer Isl-land: "There were $447 committals to this institution for drunkenness, and the aggregate of the time served by those committed was equivalent to 1313 years. With a per capita cost of maintenance of $84.70, the cost of the maintenance was $111,212," At the South Boston House of Correction "there were 107 committals for drunkenness, and the aggregate of the time served by those committed was 13,460 days. With per capita cost of maintenance of $124.47, the cost of maintenance of the above number was $4590."

A Champion's Testimony.

A champion cyclist was asked: "Do you ever take spirits of any kind? I mean whisky or brandy."
"No; they cut the breath short. You can't race and take brandy. It may help a little, but it leaves you worse. I believe that that if five or six men were together in a race, say two miles from the tape, and one was handed a drink of brandy, it might let was nanded a drink of brandy, it might let him broak away and win easily; but if he had ten miles, or had a long race before him, he would find great difficulty in riding. His breath would be cut short. The man who drinks brandy or whisky will soon be broken-winded."

"So you don't believe in brandy?"

"No; it may help for a short spurt, but it is no good for a long run. Only a tem-perateman can be a good racer."

An Authority on Alcohol and Longevity, "Life is considerably shortened by the use of alcohol in large quantities. But a moderate consumption of the same also shortens life by an average of five to six years. This is consistently and unequivo-cally seen in the statistics kept for thirty years by English insurance companies, with special sections for abstainers. They give a large discount, and still make more profit, as not nearly so many deaths occur as might be expected under the usual calculations. According to federal statistics in the fifteen largest towns of Switzerland. over ten per cent, of the men over twenty years of age die solely or partly of alcohol-ism."—Dr. A. Forel, late Professor of Psychiatrie in the University of Zurich.

Notes of the Crusade. A saloon is the devil's recruiting station. It is true that every instance of excess began with moderate use, and that it is impossible to predict which person will stay within "moderate" limits and which one will go on to "excess." It is also true that what is generally termed "moderate use" is itself excess.

Great Author, But Poor Speller, It is interesting to perceive how lively a power of observation and expression, what a degree of maturity, alike in intelligence, character and reading, Robert Louis Stevenson at eighteen or nineteen already possessed. In one particular, it must be confessed, namely, in spelling, he shows himself remarkably boyish. But Stevenson in truth never learnt to spell quite in a grown-up manner; and for this master of English letters a catarrh was apt to be a "cattarrh," and a neighbor a "nieghbor," and literature "litterature" to the end. To reproduce all these trips and slips in print would be mere pedantry; and the normal orthography has been adopted in his letters, except where he himself is aware of his difficulties and laughs over them .- Scribner's Magazine.

The Motes in a Sr beam,

Counting the dancing motes in a bar of sunlight sounds like one of those hopeless, never ending tasks with which malignant fairies delight to break the spirits of little heroines in the German folk stories. Something more than this, however, has been achieved by modern science, which is now able to count the particles float ing in any given portion of the atmosphere, and determine what portion of these are dangerous germs and what are mere dust.

Dr. Frankland's experiments have shown us how to count the microorganisms, and now a Scotch scien tist, by a totally different method, has been enabled to take stock of the more harmless, but hardly less interesting, dust motes. Thirty thousand such particles have been detected by him in the thousandth of a cubic inch of the air of a room. In the outside atmos phere in dry weather the same measurement of air yielded 2119, whereas after a heavy rainfall the number was only 521.

That this power of prying into at mospheric secrets will eventually yield very important results must be obvious to all. Among the most curious discoveries already made is the direct and constant relation which exists be tween dust particles and fogs, mist and rain.—Pearson's,

The Mental Eye.

Thousands upon thousands of persons handle our silver dollar, but few happen to observe the lion's head which lies concealed in the representation of the familiar head of Liberty; frequently even a careful examination fails to detect this hidden emblem of British rule; but, as before, when once found it is quite obvious. similar reasons it is a great aid in looking for an object to know what to look for; to be readily found, the object, though lost to sight, should be to memory clear. Searching is a moutal process similar to the matching of a piece of fabric in texture or color, when one has forgotten the sample and must rely upon the remembrance of its appearance. If the recollection is clear and distinct, recognition takes place when the judgment decides that what the physical eye sees corresponds to the image in the mind's eyes; with an indistinct mental image the recognition becomes doubtful or faulty. For correct and accurate vision it is necessary to acquire an alert mental eye that observes all that is objectively visible, but does not permit the subjective to add to or modify what is really present. - Professor Joseph Jastrow, in Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.

Bright Men Who Are Vegetarians.

The Vegetarian Society now has hundreds of members and associates. The full members pledge themselves to abstain from the use of flesh, fish and fowl as food, though the vegetable diet may be supplemented by such animal products as eggs, cheese, butter and milk.

Among the members and associates of the society are many of the brightest men in London. The late Dr. Spurgeon was a vegetarian, as also Sir Isaac Pitman. They also point with pride to the name of George Bernard Shaw, the journalist and playwright. Shaw said, in giving his reasons for being a vegetarian and a teetotaler, that, in his opinion, "a man could not do the best work there was in him on a diet of dead animals and whisky.'
