The Franklin correspondent of th Philadelphia Inquirer gives this piece of romance, the truth of which is vouched for by responsible parties. What makes the story more entertaining hereabouts, is the tact that quite a number of the comrades of some of the parties mentioned still live in this section:

"Alexander Snyder, returned from the Klondyke last week with $60,000 in gold, a half of which he said he would give to the son of his former chum, Thomas H. Critchelow, late of the Eighty-third

' Snyder was sick in the mountains for several months, and during that time Critchelow looked after, nursed and cared for him as best be could under the circumstances. They becme firm friends.

"Before they separated Snyder told Critchelow that he was going back into mountains io prospect again and if he was successful he would look up Critch elow's son, wherever he was, and divide his wealth with him. The two miners left each other, and Snyder heard afterwards that Critchelow died in Colorado
