ANOTHER FIRE HORROR.

New York Again Visited By Enormous Conflagration.

Lower Manhattan Shaken as If by an Earthquake by Successive and Violent Explosions of Chemicals Which Scattered Death and Ruin Over Two Entire Blocks.

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—The long list of fire horrors which have occurred in and around the city of New York, a list that includes the Hotel Royal fire, the Park Place disaster, and the Windsor and Hoboken fires, was added yesterday by a fire and explosion that shook the lower end of Manhattan like an earthquake, hurled a 7-story building into the air and set fire to two blocks of buildings, with a loss of life that only the efforts of the hundreds of men who were rushed to the work of digging away the ruins as soon as the fire was extinguished will reveal.

The big building of Tarrant & Co., makers of medicinal specialties, standing at the northwest corner of Greenwich and Warren streets, and filled with chemicals, took fire in some way that may never be known at about 12:15 o'clock in the afternoon. It was 15 minutes after noon that a citizen rushed into the house of fire engine 20 on Chambers street, near Greenwich, and shouted that Tarrant's drug house was on fire.

One fire company from station 52 had just arrived when a terrific explosion occurred that threw the entire engine crew down the stairway. The firemen, realising the danger of their position, rushed out of the building to the street.

The explosion had filled the street in front with a shower of falling glass and small debris which sent the crowd, which was already gathering on the opposite sidewalk, fleeing for safety, and caused the horses hitched to the engines to rear and try to get away.

Captain Devanny of the company from station 62 ordered the crew back into the building again. They were dragging the line to the doorway for the second time when another explosion, more terrific than the first, came and the whole crew was hurled across Greenwich street. Devanny being so badly injured that he was sent away to Hudson hospital.

In the meantime the other engines which had responded to the alarm had collected and the firemen were busy rescuing people from surrounding buildings. Firemen had already taken many girls down the only fire escape upon the building and more persons had been carried down the escapes of the Home Made restaurant next door and the buildings adjoining upon Warren street.

The second explosion occurred about five minutes after the first. From the accounts of witnesses the building seemed to leap into the air and in a moment masses of brick wall, timbers and stone were falling into the streets. The force of the explosion tore away the walls of the big commission storehouse fronting on Washington street, and caused them to collapse, falling all at once in a mass of timbers, boxes and barrels, from which the flames, which burst forth from the Tarrant building like lightning of a cannon, at once broke forth.

The ruin is so complete and covers so much territory that it is impossible to estimate the loss. It can only be said that the property loss will be enormous. It is believed that over a score of persons have perished.

ALVORD CAPTURED.

Arrested at Boston and Brought to New York - Refuses to Make Any Statement.

He was taken immediately to police headquarters. He refused to talk.

WHERE THE MONEY WENT.

Believed That Bank Officials Know But Are Keeping It Secret.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—A search of the records in the courthouse at White Plains shows that neither Cornelius L.

Alvord, Jr., nor his wife, Jennie B. Alvord, own any property at Mount Vernon or in the county of Westchester.

It was reiterated yesterday that the stolen money, or a greater part of it, had gone into Wall street, either by direct speculation or by backing a big bucket shop. It was said that Alvord had taken advantage of certain information he derived from private sources which induced him to speculate in railroad securities in which directors of the bank were particularly interested.

On this point, however, the bank's officers refuse to talk, but one who knows the bank's affairs well said that if this were the case Alvord must have made money instead of losing it. It is believed that the bank knows where the teller's speculations were, and what they were, but is unwilling to make the fact public. Thus no one appears to know whether Alvord has any account, what bank he used, or in what name he traded, if at all. "It looks," said a bank officer yesterday, "as though whatever transactions Alvord may have had in stock speculation they must have been conducted in some other name."

Whether this be so or not it was generally believed that no money thus lost by Alvord could be recovered from the brokers acting for him. A decision of the court of appeals in the Kiegan-Whitney case governs such transactions.

Cornelius N. Alvord's three children, accompanied by their nurse, arrived at the home of Alvord's uncle in Stockport yesterday. They were not accompanied by their mother.

His Simple Scheme.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—The comptroller of the currency in speaking of Alvord's delinquency said: "A further examination of Alvord's accounts by the officers of the bank shows that his stealings have been going on for several years. Fourteen months ago he took a two weeks' vacation and on examination of his tickets preceding his going and after his return shows that he covered his shortage while absent by making a number of charges to out-of-town accounts, and credited back the amounts on his return before the monthly statements were sent out.

"The amount of his shortage at various periods in the past seems to have gone up and down, and it is probable this is due to the fact that whenever he had reason to expect any investigation of his cash or a periodical visit from the examiner he would doctor it by means of these false charges against large accounts. In the present instance the examiner went into the bank a month ahead of the usual six months' period, the last preceding examination having been made May 15, 1900, and this unexpected visit prevented a manipulation of the figures by Alvord and led to discovery of the delinquency.

"This theft could probably have been prevented by a rotation of the clerical force of the bank, thus placing each department under the supervision of different persons successively.

"There is no way to accurately check the accounts of an employe if he has access to the succeeding day's cash from which to make good his shortage of the current day, and this is what Alvord has always had, and has also the opportunity to hold back credits for a longer time than the day on which the letters enclosing items are received."
