Starting from Frank lin in the evening, we went up as far as Moran's tayern, at what is now Oil City morning, as the sledding was poor. We Ascending the hill we stopped often to rest the horses. When we came to that took a rest and it was then and there that we behold a scene such as is described in

We beheld a large wheel of fire appar ently 200 feet high coming down the Oi and it seemed to revolve like a wheel, the entire atmosphere and scenery amid the poet, Thompson, says in describing a

"The mountain's brow bloomed with fluid gold,"

While this terrific scene was transpirng the terror stricken animals dropped to their nees or rather fell flat in the snow, trembling like leaves, but when it burst with a terrific explosion, apparent ly somewhere near the mouth of the creek, sending up as it were thousands of stars in the wintery sky we were filled with consternation, and the animals lay as if dead. The report of the explosion seemed to roll up every valley for miles around. For over 15 minutes after the explosion the trail of the moteor seemed to linger in the valley, similar to the trail of light in the trail of a rocket, only more fearful and grand, of course, I have never witnessed anything like it for grandeur and strangeness of sight and never expect again to see such a wonderful phenomena.

The early hour, the bounding ball of fire, the tremendous force, the lighting of the sky, the terrible explosion, the illuminated path, all correspond. It took a long time to induce the terror stricken horse to arise, and it was long before they got over their terror. In fact not until we reached the Poumer House, then kept by Luke Turner, about noon, did they act naturally.

My uncle said: "Sam, they will never believe us if we tell the people what we have seen and heard coming up Oil Creek hill," but Turner relieved us, 1 cemember, when he a ked us "if we had heard that awful explosion about a o'clock." We then told the whole story Mr. Magill is satisfied, the statements we were just the persons who did both
