All were burned up, together with a cow and a steer. His team of horses and other stock were saved, but one or two cows were so badly burned it is doubtful whether they will live. The origin of the fire is a complete mystery. Mr. Weingard's brother, Lewis, residing in Harmony township, had driven over the evening before to get a load of hay, and had left his wagon inside the barn, intending to load the hay next morning. As late as 12 o'clock that night the brothers had been to the barn and dences of fire about the premises when they left and retired for the night, About 2 o'clock in the morning the household was awakened by a crackling noise and the smell of smoke. Rushing out the men found the entire upper story of the barn enveloped in flames. They did what they could to save the live stock with the result noted above. Lewis Weingard's wagon and harness were also onsumed, but his horses were saved.

Mr. Weingard had kept his property insured until about two years ago when he allowed his policies to lapse, and his dren left last Friday for Guy's Mills, ward of a thousand dollars.
