

GRAVE QUESTION IN KANSAS.

In Ten Days Great Wheat Belt Will Need Help of 28,000 More Men.

Topoka, Kan., June 23.—State employment agent Gerow said that the saving of the 60,000,000 bushel wheat crop in Kansas is a grave question. He has issued call after call for harvest hands, but apparently his efforts are fruitless.

Twenty-nine counties in the great wheat belt will, in 10 days, need the services of 28,000 more men for the harvest than Kansas can supply. These men must come from states farther east. Chicago and New York could furnish these alone. "For more than this number are 100 in these cities, he said, but they will not come to Kansas and earn $2 a day and board. The wheat farmers cannot get binding twine. The state plant in the penitentiary is running night and day to furnish twine below the trust prices, but it cannot supply the demand.

Yesterday the Santa Fe and Rock Island railroads each brought 100 men from Chicago free to repair bridges and tracks. As soon as they arrived at Newton and McPherson in the wheat belt they abandoned the trains and scattered through the country to accept higher wages from the wheat farmers.

McKinley National Memorial.

Cleveland, June 23.—The trustees of the McKinley National Memorial association met here at the office of Senator Hanna. Justice Day, the president of the association, presided. A report from the officers of the association and also from the treasurer, Myron T. Herrick, showed total contributions amounting to about $500,000, and it was decided that designs should be at once invited. The trustees issued a statement asking for $100,000 additional for the proper care of the monument when erected.

German Official at West Point.

West Point, N. Y., June 23.—Baron Von Rheinbaben, secretary of the treasury of the German empire, and his party paid a visit to West Point, arriving on the seventh cutter Gresham. A review of the cadets was a feature of the day. The party returned to New York late in the afternoon.

AN ALL AROUND CITIZEN.

No One State Was Large Enough For This Son of Erin.

"There was an Irishman connected with the sister's department in the civil war," said an old veteran, "who fell asleep on the battle field after Bull Run. A party of Confederate scouts saw him, and as he had no uniform they leader prodded him awake and asked: 'Who are you? Where do you belong? What's your name?'"

"'Begob,' says Pat, rubbing his eyes, 'them's too many questions, and, be yure leave, I'll be afther askin' yez th' same.'"

"'We're McEellan's men, just from Washington.'"

"'I knew yez ware, gentlemen, and I'm thot same.'"

"'Oh! That's where we've caught you. Put him under arrest, men! We belong to Bonaparte's army.'"

"'Thin ye lied to me, an', suspectin' that same, I told yez the same thing yez told me,' retorted the Irishman promptly. 'Now, give me the truth, an' I'll do the same by yez. What state do ye come from?'"

"'From South Carolina.'"

"'So do I, an' from all the other states, becos, an' that's where I'm thinkin' I've got the best of yez. Yez don't think I'd be such a fule as to come all the way from Ireland to be long to wun state, do yez?'"—New York Tribune.

Ivory as Medicine.

Ivory was used as a medicine up to the end of the eighteenth century. In Schroder's "Zoology," 1639, translated into English by T. Bateson, it is thus described under the heading, "Elephas": "His teeth are only used in medicine, vulgarly called Ivory. The virtues: It cools and dries, moderately binds cuts, strengthens the inward parts. It is good for the jaundice, it cleanseth away Wormes, it is good for hysterical obstructions, it takes away the pains and weakness of the stomach. It heats the Epileptic, drives away Melancholy, resists rottenness and poisons. It is used in infusions, and the powder is given in substance. The dose is half a dram. Preparation: I. Burnt Ivory, called Spodium, and to distinguish it from the mineral Spodium, Spodium of Ivory. II. Trochus of Spodium."

Every ground line and made into a sort of jelly has been used as a strengthening food in many recent times by medical advice.

Worms as Soil Renovators.

Earthworms are not soil formers, for they are seldom met with in soils that are destitute of organic matter. They are simply renovators. Every time a worm is driven by dry weather or any other cause to descend deep it brings to the surface, when it empties the contents of its body, a few particles of fresh earth. At the same time it fertilizes the soil by opening up passages, which encourage the roots of plants to penetrate deeper, these passages being lined with excreted matter which provides a store of nourishment for the roots. On meadow land Darwin found that these worms casts amount annually to eighteen tons an acre and on good arable land to about ten tons.

Work For His Sheep.

A resident of London with a taste for deviled kidneys found himself recently in a remote west of England village, where a sheep was killed about once a week. Not knowing that mutton was a luxury and kidneys, for obvious reasons, therefore, a rarity, he presented himself day after day at the village butcher's with the same request for his favorite breakfast dish. The butcher, looking upon his customer as a lunatic, bore it as long as he could, but on the fifth day said indignantly, "If you think young man, that my sheep have nothing better to do than to lay kidneys for your breakfast you be mortal mistook."—London Answers.

Easy Divorce in Old Times.

The code of King Hammurabi of Assyria, whose date is approximately 2300 B. C., which has been deciphered from a pillar discovered at Susa, deals exhaustively with the subject of divorce. One of the most interesting clauses is the following: "If the wife of a man who dwells in the house of that man has set her face to go forth and has acted the fool and wasted his house and impoverished his house, they shall call her to account. If the husband shall say, 'I put her away,' he shall put her away. She shall go her way; for her divorce he shall give her nothing."

The Home of Musical Fish.

Lake Battienloa, Ceylon, has the probably unique distinction of being the home of musical fish. The sounds emitted by these are said to be as sweet and melodious as those which would be produced by a series of Eolian harps. Crossing the lake in a boat one can plainly distinguish the pleasant sounds. If an ear is dipped in the water the melody becomes louder and more distinct.

He Knew Her.

"I'm sorry, but I really can't let you see my wife if you wear that beautiful new hat. She's quite sick, and the doctor has expressly stated that nothing must be allowed to excite her."—Meggendorfer Blatter.

Plenty of Time.

"But we shall not begin our married life with a secret, shall we, dearest?"

"No, dearest," he murmured. "There's plenty of time."—Pittsburg Gazette.

A Hold Up

By ROSS FRAME

Copyright, 1907, by T. C. McClure

The Overland Limited was speeding east across New Mexico toward the Texas boundary line. The fine shadest of the high plains shifted through every crevice in the car, snarling and irritating the throats and noses of passengers. Miss Mary Appleton was one of the few who had not grumbled at the dust, heat, lack of mirages or slowness of the service. Presumably her time was too fully occupied. The Mayne children, her three nephews, demanded her complete attention.

When Major Mayne of the United States army was ordered to the Philippines, his wife elected to go with him. The children were easily disposed of by their little battery of a mother. "We'll send them east. I'll telegraph Mary to come out and take them back. It will be a nice trip for her, poor thing!"

So the "poor thing," who was Mrs. Mayne's older half sister, the Cinderella of the household, age reversed, left her invalid stepmother behind and journeyed to San Francisco for her charges.

"We'll try and make it pleasant for you while you are with us," Mrs. Mayne had cooed to her upon her arrival, but the irresponsible little lady and left all packing and home clearing arrangements until the last minute, and it took all of Mary's time and sound sense to evolve order out of confusion. Finally all the boxes were packed, the major and his wife off to the transport, and Miss Appleton, with her three rebellious charges, seated in the train for their long ride to the Atlantic coast.

One section had been provided for her and the three boys, Bobbie, Tom and Grover, lads of twelve, nine and six. They were hearty, healthy young animals, who regarded the commands of their gentle, mild tempered aunt in the light of a perpetual joke. The Pullman was crowded, and their fellow traveler looked with manifest disfavor upon the noisy, ill behaved boys.

Their section was nearest the drawing room, and Miss Appleton occasionally caught glimpses of the tall, stern looking man with iron gray hair. He seemed to be always busy, either reading or writing, and her tender conscience prompted the hope that he might be too much absorbed in his work to be disturbed by the proximity of her nephews. She had noticed his critical, disapproving glances at her flock in the dining car, and once she detected a smile on his face when she had made ineffectual efforts to curb them.

It was the fourth day of the journey and a particularly hard one. Bob and Tom had joined forces and teased Grover, who was quick tempered, into such a fury of passion that he had sobbed himself asleep on his aunt's knee. She sat in a cramped, uncomfortable position, holding the little tear stained face against her shoulder.

The man in the drawing room looked at her for a moment, then stepped out and said quietly: "Let me take your little boy. He can rest very comfortably on my sofa." Suiting the action to the words, he carried the sleeping child to the couch and set the door ajar.

Miss Appleton's lips trembled, and it was with difficulty that she kept back the tears. It was almost the first kind words spoken in those hard and disagreeable days. There had been admonitions in regard to the boys being left behind at stations and tanks or breaking their necks from windows and platforms. There had been many complaints in respect to their noise and requests that they be kept strictly to their own seats, but this was the first kindly interest manifested. The weary, nervous woman looked out steadily over the uninviting landscape so that the tears that hung heavy on her lashes might remain undetected.

The occupant of the drawing room missed nothing of what was going on. His heart gave an unaccustomed throb as he remembered the mute gratitude expressed by her dark eyes when he carried off the sleeping boy. It was a strange and by no means unpleasant sensation.

Bob and Tom sat in a virtuous armed truce. Bob's black eyes snapped as he related to Tom in subdued tones the "Adventures of Snake Eyed Sol, the Terror of the Western Plains." "If we could only get off this blasted train, we would be sure to find lots of Indians and gold and wild horses. We'd have a great time. But there's no use in trying. Aunt Mary has the porter on us." The boy looked decidedly wiled as he thought of his lost opportunities. The man within caught the look and a vision of the aunt's sweet face at the same time. "If I had the management of you, my lad, I would bring you up with a round turn," he thought.

Miss Appleton smothered a sigh and leaned back on the luxurious cushions. Her few days of more intimate acquaintance with Master Bob had made her fully aware of the consequences likely to follow from an interruption of the narrative. The comparative peace and repose were preventive of sleep. She was awakened from a doze by a brisk official voice demanding, "Your papers, please?"

"Do you mean our tickets?"

"No, madam. I have nothing to do with the tickets. I want your quarantine passports. We are near the Texas boundary line."

"But—but we have no papers excepting our tickets. We have no passports." "Very sorry, madam; very sorry, but you'll have to get off before you come to the Texas boundary."

"Get off—why?" she gasped.

"Orders, madam. The state of Texas orders that no passengers from San Francisco cross the boundary line without a quarantine passport. You're right from there, and you're sure to hear of the report that bubonic plague is in Chinatown."

"I heard nothing of it," she rejoined.

"Well, that may be. However, I am here to see that the Texas quarantine laws are obeyed." The conductor came up and joined in the conversation. "It's a great pity that you didn't look after this when you bought your tickets. The railway officials in San Francisco would have issued your certificate. It's a wonder that they didn't speak to you about it."

Mrs. Mayne had bought the tickets, and Mary remembered with a sinking heart that her sister had carelessly tossed aside a package of papers when she took the tickets from the envelope. The conductor went on. "This bubonic plague scare is a confounded nuisance to the traveling public. There is one way out of it; you can make out one that you have not been in Chinatown or the precincts within fifteen days."

"We can easily do that."

It is the unexpected that happens, and Bob's opportunity had come. "I was in Chinatown last week with Mike," he said loudly.

Miss Appleton looked at him in amazement. Mike was the major's old and trusted servant, the last person to take the boy into a place of danger. The story was incredible.

Bob looked unblushingly at his aunt. To Bob at that moment there were things better than truth. The officer looked down sternly at the little shrinking woman. "You'll have to be ready to get off at the next siding. You'll find a box car there. The local freight will pick you up later and take you to Deming. There you will find out what it is best to do."

The sympathetic excitement of their fellow passengers was subdued by the thought of relief from the troublesome boys and by nervous fear of journeying with a plague suspect. The friendly gentleman lent a hand in strapping valises and in gathering up the various impediments of an overland journey. There was evidently on his part no intention of questioning the wisdom of the laws of Texas.

Miss Appleton's patience received its crowning stroke when she mounted her trunk as a step and was dragged by a not overclean employe into the box car. She had hardly until then realized the significance of her movements. She had but a confused idea of the goodbyes of their fellow passengers generally, but the sympathetic tones of the friendly man persisted in her mind.

Bob scrambled up beside her and announced his freedom in a hilarious whoop. It was adding insult to injury, and, as much to her own amazement as to Bob's, she seized the offender by the shoulders and shook him soundly. The crestfallen appearance of their ring-leader as he sulked on a box in the corner of the car, a stern aunt who certainly held the whip hand, and strong desires for something to eat were conditions not conducive to free and easy romance in the desert. It was a very weary and sultry trio of boys that the local freight brought into Deming.

Miss Appleton's apprehensions that the whole party would be subject to an unpleasant quarantine were speedily removed. Before she had recovered from the surprise at the courtesy shown them by the railway officials, their fellow traveler of the Overland stepped from the caboose of the freight.

"I telegraphed to see that you were properly looked after, and I have come to see that it is done," he said with a smile. "I know this place very well, as I happen to be in the railroad business myself. You will be very comfortable here for a few days, until you get your passports."

Much to Miss Appleton's relief he assumed, with a matter of fact air, the entire management of their affairs. He did the telegraphing, the planning and the thousand and one duties demanded by their quarantine hold up. Once she ventured an apologetic remonstrance about taking up his time, but he had answered gayly that he was "off on a holiday," and that he was enjoying it immensely (which was strictly true).

Bob was the only unhappy member of the party. Pride forbade an acknowledgment of his falsehood, and he grudgingly accepted his punishment. He tasted the way of the transgressor in a lonely quarantine, and also realized the power of the government of Texas to punish not only visitors to Chinatown, but also those who inadvertently stray in the paths of Ananias.

A number of emigrants were awaiting the Maynes on their arrival at Manila. Mrs. Mayne nearly fainted with astonishment at the contents of one which her husband read aloud: "Mary married yesterday to Robert Reed, general manager Great Western railroad."

Fortified Rectories.

In an article on "Historical Houses" in the House a writer calls attention to a curious relic of the days when the Northumbrian pastor was compelled to live in a fortified house if he wished to preserve his worldly goods from the plundering bands of most troopers who were continually crossing the Scottish border and raiding the homesteads of defenseless villagers. One of the best examples of these fortified rectories, originally built in the fourteenth century, still exists in Rothbury. It is described in a list of fortifications in 1542 as a

Two Indian Battles. History as it Appears From the Redskins' Point of View. The Indian's side of any controversy between him and the white man has never really been presented at all. History has necessarily been written from the white man's standpoint and largely from the reports of commanding officers naturally anxious to secure full credit for their gallantry or to conceal any weakness.

Take as an illustration the so called "battle" of Wounded Knee. A Ring was formed about the Indians, and after disarming most of them one man resisted, and the troops began firing toward the center, killing nearly all the Indians and necessarily many of their own men. The soldiers then followed up fleeing women and children and shot them down in cold blood. This is not called a massacre in the official reports. The press of the country did not call it a massacre. On the other hand, General Custer was in pursuit of certain bands of Sioux. He followed their trail two days and finally overtook and surprised them upon the Little Big Horn. The warriors met him in force, and he was beaten at his own game. It was a brilliant victory for the Indians, whom Custer had taken at a disadvantage in the midst of their women and children. This battle goes down in history as the "Custer massacre."—Dr. Charles A. Eastman in Reader.
