Son of a former mayor of Troy, N. Y., and a man who once possessed a fertune and lost it, and whose sister Is reputed to be one of the wealthiest women of Troy, Carroll had for years, without the knowledge of his friends at home, filled a humble position at the Philadelphia hospital.

With his money gone and the authorities unable to communicate with his sister, who is absent from Troy on a trip, the man's body was destined for burial in Potter's field, and his remains would have gone there but for his former comrades at the hospital, who have arranged to defray the expenses of a decent funeral.

Carroll kept the history of his early career and misfortune a secret as far as his fellow employes at the hospital dustry in defiance of what they were were concerned, and it was only by mere chance that it was learned that he came from Troy.
