PRESIDENT BUTLER'S REPORT.

Says That $10,000,000 is Needed to Carry Out Plans of University.

New York, Oct. 6 .- In his annual report to the board of trustees President Butler of Columbia university declared that $10,000,000 was needed to carry out the plans of the university. Oi this sum $2,000,000 was needed for South Field and the remainder for the iollowing purposes: $2,000,000 to pay the funded debt; $2,500,000 to build and equip buildings and $2,600,000 to provide an annual income of $100,000 to meet the most pressing needs. Among the buildings needed are a college hall and law school and science buildings. Dr. Butler declares the payment of the debt to be the greatest single need.

In the course of the year gifts amounting to $1,721,895 have been received.

Concerning the Pulitzer school of journalism, Dr. Butler says: "With the establishment of a school of journalism of university grade, a new academic field is entered upon. While in a sense this undertaking is experimental, yet it is the judgment of the university and that of a large and influential portion of the newspaper press that it will be abundantly successful. The university cannot guarantee to produce good newspaper men but it can and will train students to become such if they have the root of the matter in them."

Delhi remains the center of all Indian art industries. The most skillful jewelers and gem cutters, painters, carvers, embroiderers and craftsmen whose creations could tempt the purse or minister to the luxury of the greater and lesser Moguls have gathered there for centuries, and trade liabits are but slowly broken. Along Chandai Chauk plump merchants in snow white clothes and tiny jewelers' turbans invite one to their whitewashed, felt floored inner rooms, and there, treading catlike in stockinged feet, they unroll gold and silver embroideries, Kashmir shawls and "camel's hair" stuffs

Superstition of the Unlucky Thirteen When King Arthur founded the famous round table he requested Merlin, the enchanter, to arrange the seats. Merlin arranged one set of seats to represent the apostles. Twelve were for the faithful adherents of Jesus Christ and the thirteenth for the traitor Judas The first were never occupied save by knights distinguished for their achievements, and when a death occurred mong them the seat remained vacant until a knight surpassing him in herole and warlike attainments should be considered worthy to fill the place. If an unworthy knight sought the chair he was repelled by some magic power. The thirteenth seat was never occupied but once. The story goes that a

Watch a Horse's Ears When Driving. Whether you drive a single horse or a team the principles are the same, but in driving a pair see to it that each horse does his share of the work and no more. A pair of horses, moreover, unless well driven are sure to get in the habit of wandering over the road. To drive well you must keep your eye and your mind on the horse. Watch his cars. They will be pricked forward when he is about to shy, droop when he is tired, fly back just before he "breaks" (into a gallop) and before he kicks. Before kicking, too, a horse usually tucks in his tail and hunches his back a little. When you observe

HIS CALL TO ARMS Republican State Chairman Addresses County Committeemen.

SKIRMISH OF NATIONAL FIGHT

Widespread Significance of the Present Canvass In Pennsylvania and the Influence of Its Result On the Approaching Presidential Campaign. [Special Correspondence.]

Philadelphia, Oct. 6 .- Chairman Pense, in an address to the members of the Republican county committees throughout the state, has just sounded 'a call to arms" to every active Republican of the commonwealth in an urgent request to begin active work for the entire Republican ticket and expressing the hope that this activity will not cease until the polls are closed on election day.

upon the importance of the contest and makes it clear that this campaign is but the skirmish of the national struggle which is to take place next уеаг.

CHAIRMAN'S CALL TO ACTION.

Following is a copy of the address which is being mailed to the county committeemen by Chairman Penrose: "Your name has been sent me by your county chairman as having been selected by the Republican voters of your election district to represent them on the county committee, and after congratulating you upon the honor conferred to represent such an intelligent body of voters I beg to impress upon you that the contest this year is the opening skirmish of the great battle to be fought pext year. when a president and vice president are to be chosen, also representatives in congress and members of the general assembly.

"It is therefore desirable, on account of the effect it will have upon next year's contest, that every Republican voter have impressed upon him the importance of the present contest and the necessity for him to take an active part in the campaign and that that activity be not allowed to cease until the last Republican vote in his district has been polled on election day. "This course is suggested particularly, as a large and emphatic majority will be considered throughout the nation as the indorsement of Pennsylva-

Arculatious knew his business all right. Every evening he went and stood in line with all the other push cart men in the little back street where the fruit cellars were, and loaded up with yellow bananas. And Arcularious took good care to be among the few that got the best for the least money. Had not his mother and his father kept a little shop in Athens where one went in and bought in the dark and came out and found out he had been swindled in the light? Arcularious knew how just to manipulate a bit of fruit to make it look large and sound. In order to make peddling a success in a great city there are two classes you must consider-first, the public next, but not least, the police. The public is always ready to buy, but the police are not always willing to let you sell. Arcularious, of course, had a license. This permitted him under the law to remain stationary at the curb for the space of three minutes. Under the police it was different. Arcularious noted out of the corner of his eye that a patrolman's idea of three minutes was highly elastic.

"G'wan, now!" exclaimed Officer Mulligan to Arcularious just as the latter was pulling into, not away from, the "G'wan; you been here long curb. enough, you Hungarian." Arculatious the first time this happened, started to explain-first, that he was not a Hungarian; second, that he had not been at a standstill for even three seconds,

"G'wan now"' exclaimed Mulligan giving him a sudden push that knocked his special three cent fruit into the street. "None o' yer lip!"

Arcularious cleared out. At first he couldn't understand it, but by dint of frequent inquiry he found that three minutes, from the police point of view was chronologically a cipher unless-

Unless you greased the officer's pain. with a substantial portion of your profits. Under such circumstances three minutes might extend itself into three hours, and the law, which takes no note of trifles, would never know the differ

But Arcularious, whose remote an cestor doubtless held the pass at Thermopyle, rebelled. That which the law vouchsafed unto him-that, he reasoned with himself, he must have.

"These man!" he reasoned with himself, referring to Policeman Mulligan-"these man! I shall get even - very even, with these man!"

It has ever been a mooted question whether the policeman was made for the side door or the side door for the policeman. There were several side doors on Policeman Mulligan's beatlike as not all made for him. At any rate, he made for them with a persist ency worthy of a better cause. But the powers that be had tabooed the side door practice. So it was only when the coast was clear that Mulligan deigned to enter.

"I tell these judge," responded Arcu-Mulligan's face broke into a smile. 'Say, Mr. - Mr. - what's yer name! Come back here for a minute, I want to introduce you to a friend o' mine." Arcularious looked for an instant at the officer, then, leaving his cart in charge of two of the boys, took the third with him. Mulligan led the way up a pair of dirty stairs to a lawyer's office. Mulligan and the lawyer talked in whispers for a moment. The lawyer addressed Arcularious sharply, "Here," he said, "you mustn't interfere with this officer, sir. What d'ye mean by It?"

Arcularious bowed and showed every tooth in his head. "Exactly," he replied, waving his cap in the air. "These man go in saloon six, seven, eight times a day, judge, your honor; eight times, these man, No. 337. I see him; he see him; they see him."

The lawyer plucked Mulligan by the sleeve, "Say, Mulligan," he whispered, "that fellow means business-he's sharper than you think for. You better shut his mouth-pay him something. You can't afford to be broke." Mulligan pulled out a roll of bills and shoved them into the hand of Arcularious. "Here, Mr. What's Your Name," he said, "take this and keep your mouth shut about the side door biz. Understand?"

Arcularious bowed low and thrust the money into his pocket. "And now," he announced, "I go to other judge and tell him. Maybe I get more money.

Eight times I see these man"-Mulligan started in to speak. Arcularious stopped him. "Maybe," he said, "I do not go. How long," he asked of Mulligan, "have we been here?" Mulligan looked at the clock and answered mechanically, "About three minutes, 1 suppose."

"Three minutes," returned Arcularious, with a significant gesture toward his cart which they could see from the window, "and how long is these three minutes-on these streets? Mulligan smiled. He understood. He saw the policeman on the next block driving the unfavored push cart men before him.

"About three hours and a half-to you," he replied.

Arcularious waved his hand and turned to the boy. "I give you and these other boy some of these," he said, significantly tapping his pocket. "I never see these man, 337, go into these saloon, did you?" "You bet your sweet life I didn't."

The Price of Two Portraits,

Professor Lenbach of Munich painted Bismarck's pertrait and soon afterward was informed that Baron Bleichroeder would like to buy it and wanted to know the price. Lenbach sent back word that the price was 25,000 marks and at that price Bleichroeder declined to become the purchaser. Some tim afterward Bleichroeder invited the painter to call on him, and on his ar rival he asked him If he would be willing to paint his portrait. Lenbach re plied that he would be willing to do the work and that the price of the portrait would be 25,000 marks. The fact that in many of the counties the matter of congressional and legislative nominations is now being discussed brings up prominently the fact that next year will be a very important one in state and national politics and that the outcome of next month's election must necessarily have a bearing upon the outlook for Republican success next year.

Since Senator Penrose got back Secretary Andrews has had more time to devote to the correspondence bureau. and it is fortunate that he has, for there has been a flood of letters received at headquarters at every mail bearing upon the state campaign. This is regarded as a very significant feature of the canvass, for when the members of the county committees will take the pains to write to headquarters regarding the sentiment and the outlook in their respective election districts it is a sure indication that the party workers are aroused to their duty and that they will leave nothing undone to bring out a full Republican vote at the coming election. Fully a majority of the members of the last legislature have been included among the callers at the head-uarters since Senator Penrose's return, and they all agree that the record of the last session of the general assembly in the liberal appopriations to the public schools, the large sums of money set aside for the improvement of the public roads and the other meritorious measures which were passed and approved by Governor Pennypacker has met with popular approval.
