It might have been a miracle. There was that looked as if it might be the beginning of a bill. Each little creature resembled a black bean more than a bird, for each possessed a light streak of brown down the middle of the back. They couldn't be beans, for they were pulsing with life in a lumpy sort of way. I went frequently to look at them. In a few days the little nestlings began to fork out all over with tiny black horns, until they would have looked like prickly pears had they been the right color. At the rext stage, each tiny hern began to blossom out into a spray of brown down, the yellow at one end grew into a bill, the black skin cracked a trifle and showed two eyes. It was hard to see just how these black bugs could turn to birds, but day after day the miracle worked till I really saw two young humming-birds." Letter to F. R. Lanson,

The buyer, as usual, went by the cost of paint; get bids. Lead-and-oil bid low and guessed the quantity low; the saving was only 11 per cent.

Nobody seems to have thought of this; the painting cost two or three times as much as the paint. How much did we save on the painting? Don't know. The tale ends with this: We often refer inquirers to those houses, for wear of Devoe.

That's a good-enough story; but no body knows what it is. Our only difficulty is want of paint-intelligence. Yours truly, F. W. DEVOE & Co.,
