THE landing of over one million immigrants in this country during the fiscal year ending with June should bring congress to enact new measures of restriction at the coming session, says the Kane Republican. The annual injection of hordes from eastern and southern Europe, equal to one eightieth of our total population, is a menace to our civilization which demands serious consideration. These people, who in the main gather in populous communities, carry with them race characteristics which are radically at variance with American aspirations. Such strong infusion of people of a lower buman grade than our own must lower the general standard of the population of this country. Their influx places the burden of providing for the proper rearing of their descendants upon the wealth of the country, and the future absorption of the children of the average immigrant of this period into the American race presents the prospects of less promising amalgamation than the earlier combination of Tentonic and Celtic peoples. It is quite time that congress cease to favor the great steamship companies and enact the educational test for admission to our ports which would save the American people from the vast annual influx of ignorance and degradation,
