The movement is political in its na ture as it is asserted that the bank was ruined through the fact that it carried $782,000 in state funds and that Pennsylvania politicians has loans of the bank to the extent of $500,000, using their influence with the state treasury to compel the bank to lend them this money.

Examiner Cunningham has turnet over all the notes found in the bank to the Bank of Pittsburg through which the Enterprise bank cleared. As soot as this was announced $100,000 in notes were lifted by persons who are alleged to be unwilling to have it known they were among the borrowers. Of this amount a large sum was known as political paper.

The announcement that the examin er found a note left by Cashier Clark in which he implicated living men has heen denied by Cunningham. Others insist that such a confession exists and they intend to wrest it from the bank examiner in the courts.

William U. Andrews, representative from New York and one of the mer interested in the Pennsylvania Development company, has been charged with being one of the men implicated by Clark in the alleged confession Mr. Andrews was interviewed on the subject. He stoutly denied that he had anything to do with the breaking of the bank. He was told that three notes signed by him were found in the bank, and after he had made indignant denials that any paper existed he said that if any paper with his name was found in the bank those notes were forgeries.
