this week, is the manager of the A. Cook Sons Company's dairy farm and creamery. There isn't a more complete dairy farm in the country than that over which and the cows surpasses anything that we have ever seen in the way of convenience, leanliness and sanitary arrangements. The large barn is kept as clean as any floor can be kept, and the milk is pro- publican. tected in everything, from the milking to the producing of butter, so that not a particle of impurity, or even a foul smell has a chance to taint it. The result is that the butter is absolutely pure. The feeding of the cows is also carefully guarded that only the best and cleanest food shall ever be fed them. Under such conditions it is not surprising that the butter, in the Pittsburg market, commands the highest price of any creamery butter that reaches that place. The A. Cook Sons Company and Mr. Rea are to be congratulated on this state of affairs .-Clarion Democrat.

Attractive Farmer Institutes.

Under the above caption the talented Franklin correspondent of the Oil City Derrick writes this true estimate of the farmers' institutes of to-day. What the writer says of the Venango institutes is true of those that will be held in this county-at East Hickory beginning today, followed by one at West Hickory tomorrow, and a two-day session at Tionesta on Friday and Saturday of this week. The article follows:

"In the Farmers' Institutes as now held, under the auspices of the state board of agriculture, there's a decided departure from the dry, humdrum rontine that used to prevail at thesse functions. The addresses and discussions deal with up-to-date topics and new questions and experiments that are of practical interest and value to the farmer, the stock breeder, the housekeeper, and others within the scope of agriculture. (Continued from last week.) But here we left the road and at six started across the veldt, keeping as much as possible on top of ridges. Sometimes we would go down some very steep pitches or over rocky places and then Solomon, our driver, would say that "inkosikazi" should get out. Mr. Smtih was walking most of the time. Over this country and especially over the awfol cuttings I tried to describe, with so many short curves, I felt I would much rather ride behind that plodding team of oxen than behind horses or the more modern ways of locomotion.

We supposed our driver was traveling until he reached a camping place but at seven he said he thought we could reach home by bed time. It was a beautiful moonlight night and the thought of sleeping "at home" buoyed us up and made us forget we had not stopped for supper. But Beulah did not appreciate traveling so late at night and insisted on being carried most of the way and was Will Pope is the proud possessor of a glad for even a dry crust of bread.
