THE Chicago Tribune's latest political canvass is perhaps its best. A National straw vote just taken by that paper shows that President Roosevelt's policies are just as heartily indorsed now by the mass of Republicans as they ever were. of Republicans as they ever were. The figures demonstrate that these policies are indersed absolutely by ninety-nine out of every one hundred persons from out of every one hundred persons from whom ballots were received. Exactly 4.438 voters, representing every State in the Union were polled on this particular question. The number included Republican editors, members of State Legislatures, Representatives and Senators in Congress and delegates and alternates to the last Republican National convention. No fewer than 4,044 adirmatively declared in writing their approval of the President's policies; only 184 declared positively against them, while 210 failed to answer the question, although they sent in votes on candidates.

Jack Frost on a Train.

A Butler dispatch to the Pittsburg Gazette Times under date of 7th inst. has this interesting story: While the passengers on a snowbound train on the Baltimore & Ohio railr ad were sitting in the day coach cursing their luck early this morning, Mrs. Bebeur, who sat alone, faintly called to the only other woman in the car. There was a whispered conversation, and then the other woman drove all the men into the smoking car. Half an hour later she called them back.

"Everything's all right," she said. "It's a boy. But they've got to have doctor." The train had been stalled 12 hours in the snowdrifts, and nobody knew when Then six of the men, with the woman and the new-born babe aboard, dragged the sled over the snow to the nearest farm house, three miles distant. There horses were secured, and a doctor soon was in attendance on Mrs. Bebeur, This evening, just as the train was able to pull out, the passengers learned that both mother and child were doing well. The boy will be named Jack Frost, because his mother came from Frosts, Pa., and he arrived amid the snow.
