Paper by Mr. Orion Siggins, of West Hickory, Pa., read before the Farmers' Institute held in Tionesta, Pa., February 28th and 29th, 1908,

The Allegheny River at West Hickory, Pennsylvania, forms the Western boundary of the great body of white pine which once grew in Pennsylvania. White pine did not exist west of this only in very the 28th Congressional District, subject to small patches, scarcely any after passing the decision of the Republican voters of the western boundry of the State. On a line northwest of that place is a hardwood section for a distance of five hundred miles, then would be reached what was once the greatest white pine section of the United States, i. c., Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Turning to the east of this large body is found more or less white pine to a distance of more than 1500 miles. Very little of this timber is found below the southern boundary of Pennsylvania. Some distance south of this the southern pine takes its place. This is a smaller tree and contains more pitch and is a harder wood which will not yield more than one-fourth as much per acre.

A white pine tree originates from a seed or spore which forms in cones growing invaribly on the top branches of the tree. These cones are two years in maturing. The cones open in September and October and the winds blow the seeds in a haphazard manner out over the ground sometimes a mile distant, though generally quite close at hand, possibly to the extent of ten acres, and mostly toward We are authorized to announce John C. the east in this section, as west winds leaves so that they can not reach the Guaranty Company of Kittanning. ground, or insects do not destroy them, or the rains wash them into a stream, or Between the fifth and shoots, causing a crooked stem. Sometimes a green limb is broken off by another tree falling. This lets in water which forms "punky" or rotten trees. If the tree escapes all these obstacles in about 60 or 70 years it will be from 70 to 80 feet high. At the age of 150 or 200 years the tree will be about full grown, and attain the height of 120 to 150 ft., cutting from 2000 to 5000 ft. board measure. Then the growth is slow and at 225 to 300 years the growth rings which form yeary become so small it is almost impossible to count them. At about this time, mabe earlier, the tree begins to die at the top and decay works farther down from year to year. In 1896 I cut several of these old trees, one of them making a stick of timber, off the butt, 30 feet long, which measured 30x31 inches in diameter. This was the only part of the tree which showed life and was sound enough to be merchantable. The tree was 300 years old as nearly as I could ascertain.

Forest county contains 337 square miles or 215,680 acres. About 35,000 acres of this were originally covered with white pine. At an average of 35,000 ft. per scre would make twelve hundred and twentyfive millions feet, board measure. The above estimate does not include Barnett Township. It is stated by good authority that no acre of land in Pennsylvania ever produced 100,000 feet, board measure. I am of the opiniou, however, that acres could have been found in Forest county which would have produced more than that amount of pine alone. In point of rapid growth, value and variety of usefolness no timber compares with white pine. Its wood is soft. Mechanics would rather work in it that in any other wood Its trees attain greater size than any others in Pennsylvania forests. It is durable. In 1844 my father covered a barn with white pine shaved shingles. I quarters because the United States Gov- removed them in 1888 when they were ernment is about to take measures to yet turning water. have been cleared, are hopeful signs that several years that a proper growth of white pine forest reaching the age of 100 or 125 years will produce as much sawed lumber as it ever will as the dying out and destruction is so great. I wish to state here that I am of the opinion that it is damaging to trim any green limbs from pine trees. For it they are planted in proper proximity to each other nature will provide for this. The limbs will day and fall off at the right time, leaving only such on the top of the tree as nature seems to require. It is unnecessary to go into details of obtaining seeds and producing seedlings here as the Government has so fully covered this subject in their circulars at many times. Forest Reserve Circular No. 100 issued June 22, 1907, entitled "Suggestions for Forest Planting," will give all information necessary on this subject. It is accompanied by a leaflet containing names and addreses of twelve nurserymen who will furnish seed lings of white pine together with size of seedlings and price of vieve Bell, same. They also give names of men who will furnish seeds and prices of same. Forest Reserve Circular No. 140, issued Jan, 28, 1908 describes what wonders have been obtained in Forestry in foreign countries. In Year book of Department of Agriculture for 1905 you would find a description of "How to produce a Home Nursery," All of which information can be had free of charge from the United States Department of Agriculture, Division of forestry.
