BURIAL OF UNIDENTIFIED.

Last of the 167 Victims of Collinwood Holocaust Laid to Rest.

Cleveland, March 10 ... When twentyone flower strewn little white easkets were placed beneath the ground in Lake View cemetery yesterday the last of the 167 charred remains of children who lost their lives in the burning of the Lake View school in Collinwood Wednesday were laid to

The twenty-one caskets contained the bodies of the seventeen unidentified children and four that were claimed at the last moment. All were buried together in one big public funeral.

Earlier services were held in each of the eight churches in Collinwood. The parents of the unclaimed ones attended the church of their respective faiths. Following this the public service was conducted by Rev. Gerard F. Patterson at the morgue.

When the services were held all of the church bells in the village tolled simultaneously. Also memorial services were held in all of the Cleveland schools at the same hour,

At the coroner's inquest Fritz Hirter, the janitor of the ill-fated building, was exonerated from all imme for the fire by Coroner T. A. Burke.

Late in the afternoon a public meeting was held by Cleveland school officials, city officials and editors of the Cleveland daily papers. The school board was recommended to make immediate repairs to the present buildings, but it was not deemed necessary to close all of the school buildings until all repairs have been attended to: At night the school board decided to raze the Mayflower school building located in the Chetto district at once and erect a larger and modern fire proof building in its place. Other school rooms were ordered closed in various parts of the city until fire escapes can be built. Fire wardens will be stationed at all of the dangerous buildings, who will patrol the buildings until they are placed in an approved condition.

The board also decided to issue honds for $450,000 at once to make wheat and out straws, $8.50.

JONAS' BIRTHDAY PRESENT

"Certainly Jonas must have a birthday present! Now the question is. What shall it be?" said black-eyed May Gardner, in a determined man-"Just think! He'll be thirtyfive years old, and has never had one except when he was a little boy, al-

"Did he say that?" asked Jennie Deering, with a curious blush. "Yes, he told Uncle John so," repeated it to me I just decided that he should have a present this year, "Oh, girls!" broke in Sallie Green, with a ringing laugh. "I've thought of the very thing! Let's give Jonas a wife for his birthday present! He has everything else that he needs, and you know he is altogether too timid to ever secure a wife without some assistance!"

"Won't he resist it?" asked the girls, timidly, but May checked them

"Certainly not, if she is the right What man would! The only thing is to see that she is in every way worthy of him, for Jonas is really a splendid fellow, even if he is bashful. Jonas shall have a wife for his birthday, that much is settled! Now who shall she be, and how will we present her?"

The three girls sat for a moment in silence; then suddenly May was struck with a bright idea. The other girls stared at her in breathless amazement when she told them what Here we are, getting older and older every day, and not a man in the village that is marriageable except Jonas. Now we all like him, you know we do; but, if we wait for him to propose, we'll all die old maids, and that would be awful. All Jonas needs i. a little encouragement, and no one will ever know that we used our influence for each other!"

And, finally, her reasoning prevailed, possibly by the aid of a tender sentiment existing toward Jonas in the hearts of both the blushing maid.

"I say Jonas, you'd oughter be thinkin' of marryin," said Uncle John" Gardner, shortly after the important agreement between the three "I s'pose so." said Jonas absently, with a little blush.

"'Pears to me you'd better ba lookin' around," continued the old farmer as indifferently as possible. 'Your thirty-fifth birthday is comin' and you've be'n half your life without a wife. Must be sort o' desolate fer ye, I'm thinkin," What'll I do?" asked Jonas, sheepishly. 'Ask one of these pretty girls as he glanced slyly at Jonas. Which one'll I ask? queried Jonas-that was exceedingly funny "John Gardner, be you out of your head?" said Jonas, half angrily, But the farmer's words burned in his brain long after he had parted with his friend and neighbor.

An hour before midnight they were sitting alone in the kitchen, for the old folks had gone to bed in a most accommodating manner, "Did you know my birthday was next week, Jennie?" said Jonas, suddenly. He was sitting as near her as he dared when he asked the ques-

Suddenly Jennie giggled in a most unaccountable way.

"Do you want a birthday present, Jonas?" laughter that bordered on hysterics. "I want a wife!" he said, boldly, a glass vase, and then blushed as red as a poppy, "That's what I mean!" said Jennie, still hovering on hysterics. "Do you want a wife for a birthday pre-would marry you, I am sure. They are both nice girls, and you're bound to like them!" She blurted out the words in the most astonishing way, and then finished by bursting into a fit of crying.

"But I don't want Sallie Green or May Gardner! I want you or nobody, for my wife!" Jonas said bravely.

The sight of her tears had mad: him bold, and he was holding her hands now in the tenderest fashiou. And before 120'clock she was his promised wife, and when he left her there was only one cloud upon her happiness. "The girls will be awfully mad," she sail over and over, "but, anyhow, I have kept my promise-I am going to give Jonas a wife for his birthday."

Had His Revenge. The rivalry was great at the annual cricket match police versus publicans, and many friendly bets depended on the result. When the last batsman, Police Constable Robinson, walked to the wicket the police required only two runs to win, and naturally great excitement prevailed. He batted with Pay of Army Officers. A glance over the army list shows that over two-thirds of the officers are receiving less pay per day than good mechanics receive in civil life. The officer has no home, but must be prepared to live in the arctics or the tropies and change from one to the other at short notice. He must have equipmeat for both, and while in one place the equipment for the other is stored

Hot, tired and dusty, the excursion was returning from the seaside day trip, and Simkins, a little bald man with big ears, overcome with his day of happiness, dropped off to sleep. In the batrack above another passenger had deposited a ferocious crab in a bucket, and when Simkins went to sleep the crab woke up and, finding things dull in the bucket, started exploring. By careful navigation Mr. Crab reached the edge of the rack, but the next moment down it fell, alighting on Simkins' shoulder. Not feeling quite safe, it grabbed the voluminous ear of Simkins to steady itself, and the passengers held their breath and waited for developments. But Simkins only shook his head slightly. it is Macon, Mo., and the Stranger Invariably Notices the Trees.

The stranger in Macon, Mo., invarlably notes the large number of magnificent shade trees that border the streets of the town. The place has come to be known as "The City of Maples," and the inhabitants take pleasure in telling of how these fine trees were acquired. In 1872 John W. Beaumont, a real estate man, "went broke" and could not pay his taxes, which amounted to $116. He offered the city council in lieu of the cash 10,000 young maple trees, from one to two inches in diameter, all ready to set out. It was that or nothing, so the council took the trees. By public proclamation the Mayor fixed an "arbor day," and everybody who would agree to set them out and care for them received from six to ten trees. At that time the town was almost bare of trees of every kind. Almost in a day Mr. Beaumont's legal tender for taxes was in the hands of the inhabitants, and they so faithfully carried out the mayor's Injunction that today there is hardly a street in town which is not beautifully shaded by thick leaved trees, suggesting a town in the tropics.
