THE Philadelphia Record is of the opinion that the scrap heap of large industrial companies is a decidedly interesting affair and a rather valuable asset. That of the New York Edison Company for last year was sold approximately for $200,000. The material included 932,000 pounds of scrap copper, 359,000 pounds of pig iron, 72,000 pounds of mixed metals and approximately 500 tons of iron. This does not include the materials which were redeemed for further use.

WASHINGTON'S new union station, recently completed, is the wonder of all visitors, particularly those who were acquainted with the old B. & O. and the old union station. The public is now clamoring for car tracks to the new station, as it is a walk of about three blocks to the nearest line. The station itself is large enough to accommodate traffic in the capital for the next 100 years, and the concourse, which is longer than the capitol building, will permit visitors to the inauguration, on March 4th next, to get in without crowding.

"UNCLE JOE" Cannon, who has been compelled to transact all his business, public and private, in one room, has at last drawn two rooms—those formerly occupied by the committee on Ways and Means, which has moved to the new office building. For years, the speaker, his secretary, and the parliamentary clerk of the House, have been kept to one room. The result has been that the speaker was driven to the closet in corridor when he wanted to have a conference in private. Inasmuch as he is running for president now as hard as he can, he has many things that need looking after and the two rooms will probably be the cause of adding impetus to his boom, which, according to William Brown McKinley, who is taking care of it, is not a thing to be sneezed at.

K. C. Heath's Trip to Mexico.

From a private letter written by K. C. Heath, of Los Angeles, Cal., to County Treasurer Geo. W. Holeman, we are permitted to copy the following:

CALMALLI, MEXICO. I had intended to write and congratulate you on your election, but I was down here in Mexico at the time and did not hear of it until a month afterwards. I remember the day very well. I was down near the Santa Clara Mountains, about 100 miles from any human being but my mossier and an American who went with me. I wished that I could be there to cast my vote for you, but I was very glad you did not need it. My first trip down in this country was last November. At that time I was sent by a colony to look over 500,000 acres of land that the company owned, of which company, by the way, I am treasurer. We left San Diego on Nov. 6th, by boat to Point Preetta. That is about 350 miles south of San Diego by water and about 450 miles by land. At Point Preetta we got five mules, including our pack mules, and a mossier (a mossier is a servant and guide that knows the country). We took five days' rations with us, as it would be five days before we would get to a place where we could get anything to eat, which would be at Calmalli, a small Mexican town where there was once a large mining camp, but now only a few Mexicans and Yaqui Indians remain. Calmalli is about 10 miles from the edge of the colony and about 150 miles from Point Preetta. Well, that was my first experience of the saddle and blanket. The first few nights the coyotes kept me awake but I soon got used to them. There are a great many of them down here but they are perfectly harmless, although very troublesome. I have had them steal a ham bone from under my saddle that I was using for a pillow. They are about the size of a good-sized shepherd dog. We journeyed on over some of the worst country that you ever could imagine.

We traveled one whole day over nothing but rocks piled upon rocks, and other, over places where you would not think it possible for a cat to go, but the mules are used to this country and can go where a man cannot. We saw plenty of deer and mountain sheep, and just as thick as black birds. Also saw plenty of antelopes, but they stay near the coast and we traveled back in the interior, as we could find more water there. Well, in due time we arrived at Calmalli and there stocked up with enough provisions to last us the rest of the trip, we thought. We went over the land of the colony as best we could. Of course we could not get any good water, and that along the coast is from 100 to 150 miles apart. I must tell you about the salt mines which run from the Santa Clara Mountains along the coast of Negro Lagoona or Black Warner Lagoona, thirty-six miles long and three or four miles wide. It has all the appearance of ice and is so hard that the mules feet would make no impression in it. One could take a sleigh-ride on it with the thermometer 120° in the shade. We crossed this to Scammom Lagoona. There we saw some of the largest turtles—I am almost ashamed to tell how large they were—but to be accurate some of the shells measured five feet across. The mossier said that there were there and camped for six months and caught and dried over three tons of turtle meat. By the looks of the shells scattered around it looks as though he might have done so. Back about five miles from here there was water, where we had been stopping for a day or two. The next place for water was Santa Domingo, which used to be part of a city but nothing there now but a few old shacks and a well, and 100 miles from where we were, which we expected to make in about two days. The third morning out of this camp we got up to find all but two of our mules had run away. We found they had taken to the mountains and we knew it was useless to hunt them. Then we were 45 miles from Santa Domingo, where we could get water, and 90 miles from where we could get anything to eat. I noticed that morning for the first time that we were short on provisions, so we packed what stuff we had on the two remaining mules and all started to walk, but we had not gone five miles when the mossier and my partner played out, so I packed them on top of the packers and realized that it was up to me if we ever got out alive. I walked and ran all day with the sun beating down on me at the rate of 120° in the shade, if there had been any shade. About six o'clock I told them that I would have to rest and eat something or I could not make it. The mules were in pretty bad shape too, as they had been two days without water. The mossier then told me that we were within six or seven miles of Santa Domingo. I drank some coffee, ate a little lunch, and then laid down intending to rest a little while and then pull on, but I was so near played out that I went to sleep and never awakened until daylight, and then pulled on again. My feet felt as though there were wrinkles in my socks or something in my boots, but I did not stop and about six o'clock we got to the well, and I must say that for once I was played out. The mossier and my partner watered the mules and then came to look after me, as they say I was in pretty bad shape. I could not even get up, my feet were swollen so they could hardly get my boots off and when they did they found the bottoms of my feet were covered with blisters as big as dollars. Well something else had to be done, as we were then 45 miles from Calmalli, the nearest place we could get anything to eat, so we dispatched the mossier for more mules and provisions. We had some corn left for the mules and a little provision. I told the mossier to leave us some of the corn on hand for the mules in case anything happened that he did not get back in time. We expected him, which was some time the next night. After he had gone my partner took stock of what we had to eat and found we had two ten-pounds of cracker dust that he had eaten out of an old gunny sack, a piece of bacon-rind about as big as your hand, without any meat on it, and a piece of cheese the size of a hen's egg, rations for two hungry men for two days, as we thought. The first day I was not able to hold my head up, but the second day my partner made some moccasins for me out of some sacks and I got around some, but we were getting pretty hungry as we had eaten everything up. I lightened my belt up another notch and we expected the mossier back that night but he did not come, so I went out where he had fed the mules and picked up the corn the mossier had scattered out of their mouths, got about one-half cup, washed it and ate that and felt much better. You might ask why we did not kill something. We were in the open country and did not see even shrubbery and as we had nothing but revolvers, that was out of the question. I believe I never put in such a night as I did that night. Every time I would drop asleep I would dream of being in a big room full of good things to eat and I could not get them. The wolves seemed to get bolder and I imagined that they were waiting to pick my bones. The fifth morning we had lightened our belts to the last notch, so we thought we would try the beach which was about five miles away. I managed to hobble down and there we found acres and acres of clams. Well, we did not do a thing to them; did not try to cook them but ate them just as they were until we got our appetites appeased a little. Then we took some with us back to our camp, which consisted of our blankets, and roasted and boiled and made clam soup and ate to our fill. We overdid the matter as it made us both sick and I thought I could eat no more clams. The next morning just at sun-up the Mexican came in with mules and provisions. He expected to find us more

Letter to James Haslet, Tionesta, Pa. DEAR SIR:—Ten years ago, there was one pure paint and 200 adulterated; there are now eight pure, 200 adulterated, about half of the latter short-measured besides.

There is still but one best, and the difference is ten gallons Devco goes as far as eleven next-best—$5 in every ten gallons. A new word has come up in paint; it is strong. Strong paint goes further and wears longer; weak paint takes more gallons and wears-out sooner. The proper cost of a 10-gallon job is $50. Paint that takes 11 gallons makes it $55. Paint that takes 12 gallons makes it $60. Paint that takes 13 gallons makes it $65. Paint that takes 20 gallons makes it $100. The $60 job wears twice as long as the $100. These figures are not precise; they are around. The 10-gallon paint is Devco. Yours truly, F. W. DEVOE & CO. P. S.—Dunn & Fulton sell our paint.
