While the succeeding explanation was made before the last uniform primaries, we find, owing to questions that have been asked, that it will be well to once more explain that a voter at the primaries may only vote for the candidates of one party. Many people still think that a voter can vote for some democrats and some republicans, at the primaries April 11. The fact that the primary election is held under the law by the regular election board has led to this conclusion.

Good Reading In The Home.

[Paper by Mrs. F. J. Henderson, read at the Farmers' Institute at Kelleysville, Pa., March 3, 1908.]

"Books," says Henry Ward Beecher, "are the windows through which the soul looks out. A home without books is like a house without windows. Let us pity those poor rich men who live barrenly in great bookless houses! Let us congratulate the poor that in our day books are so cheap! A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessities of life."

One who loves good books is on the path leading to all knowledge. He will have company in the midst of solitude, and company of his own choosing. Human companionship may fail in responding to our moods of sadness or gladness, but our acquaintance with books will bring us a sympathetic friend for each mood. We may be surrounded by the poorest of earth but, in imagination, have all the world's wealth. Our older friends will tell us as they look backward through the years that their opportunities for reading were often most limited. They were taught to read from the New Testament owing to a lack of text books. Many country homes had nothing more in the way of reading than an almanac and the bible, and the weekly newspaper found a place in a small proportion of the homes. But the causes for the lack of reading in those times is not to be considered in these later days. The free delivery of rural mail matter brings books, papers and magazines into our homes most expeditiously, and the cost of these publications is surprisingly low in comparison with that of some years ago. In fact, the land is so flooded with publications that the question of choice is the only one left for our consideration. This fact may be a blessing, in that it furnishes us a wide opportunity for selection, but one's literary taste should be well trained to be able to choose wisely. As our subject concerns good reading, in the home, we conclude that the home-maker or parents are responsible to the younger members of the family for the quality of reading matter brought into it. It is an inspiration to children to feel that their parents are in advance of them; they enjoy intellectual companionship and are benefited by looking to their parents for such help. They like to know that the people at home are not "behind the times," but are thoughtful and alert concerning questions of the day. Under these conditions children will take advice and help far more readily than in cases where the parents have allowed themselves to grow mentally careless. There may be homes where these helpful influences are lacking, and in such cases the teacher in the public schools comes next in responsibility and can do much to cultivate a love for good reading. Our many good series of text-books and supplementary works contain the finest selections for this purpose. The teacher should have in mind that reading trains the senses of sight and hearing; it trains the powers of observation; it strengthens and develops the memory by the accumulation of a large number of facts. It also develops the imagination by descriptions of scenes, places and persons, and as a result of all these causes it exercises the judgment and reasoning powers. Hence, no all-round mental development is possible without much and varied reading. How important it is that the child as early as possible becomes master of this art, since all his later progress depends upon how he reads and what he reads. It is true that the mind grows by what it feeds upon, so it is necessary to distinguish the bad from the good. Some standard of excellence is necessary in choosing our reading. Books which are classics, which have survived the criticisms of the years, are praised, loved, and given a place in our mental treasure-house, are safe books with which we may compare those of latest date.

The companions of one's thoughts are as important as one's companions of flesh and blood and exert an influence as real. Solomon says, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." We desire our children to associate with others of good thoughts and habits, but are we always as careful concerning the influences they receive from their reading? We can in a measure counteract the influence of bad company, but can we overcome the suggestions for evil which are ever present in some of the magazines, books and papers? Some of the reading is harmful because it lacks literary merit, consequently one's time would be wasted in reading it, for though the thoughts be ever so good they would be hidden by the poor way in which they were expressed. Poor and incorrect language is most easily imitated, and one of the best ways of overcoming this fault is by reading from the best authors. One may learn to think in words of the author but if the language is wrongly used one receives more harm than good. Again, some of the reading is harmful because of its extreme unreality. We get an incorrect and distorted view of real things until in time the mind is unable to distinguish between the real and the unreal. Many of these cheap publications are written especially for boys and girls of unformed characters and uneducated tastes, and statistics of our prisons show that many youthful criminals have been led into wrong-doing by suggestions of these cheap and demoralizing papers.

Some of the newspapers should have no place in the home because of the way in which the news is presented. The mind is greatly influenced by whatever is brought persistently to its attention, and when news of murders, suicides, railroad wrecks, scandals, misfortunes and horrors of all kinds are exaggerated in description, the effect is depressing. This form of news is sent broadcast with the idea that the greater the shock produced in the readers' minds the greater the interest. But an interest inspired by the horrible things of life is not a healthful diet for the mind to have daily, especially in youth. The books and magazines in which stories of war, fighting, hate, and the adventurous side of life are described, should also be prohibited. The descriptions are coarse, the suggestions impure, the language usually vulgar slang. The pictures which accompany these are as suggestive of evil as the language, and strike the eye where many would not give a moment to the reading. We can keep these corrupting influences out of the home by furnishing what is good. The time to direct the child's thoughts is in the beginning, and if they have acquaintance with none but the best reading there will be a cultivated taste which will be a guide in all the future. Where there is something good to read, with a good light, and a comfortable chair waiting for our boys they will not complain for "something to do," or fidget and fuss until they can get out to run in the streets. "Home is where the heart is," or in other words our children will wish to be where they are attracted most. Surely the parents are responsible if home is not the most attractive place for those in our care. With the works of a good author they are in the world's best company. Many of the authors of boys' and girls' books have a knowledge and love of youth which aids them in suggesting the most helpful things in the most attractive way. There are the daily newspapers which present all the news in a clean way and with well-written editorials. The weeklies are more reliable perhaps for they have more time to judge the importance of news and its effect upon the public.

Children should be taught to discriminate in reading newspapers, selecting only the things of importance. A few good magazines should be in reach as they present the crystallized thought of the time, and are a record of the world's best results in invention, travel, fiction and scientific research. Many of the best books have first appeared in serial form in the magazines. The boys should have a paper specially devoted to their own interests, the most highly recommended perhaps, being the "American Boy." This is suggestive of good in all its departments, and is an inspiration to a boy to be inventive, industrious, helpful and honorable. The girls have specially prepared publications, some of the world's best authors and artists being contributors. Our Sunday Schools, too, have many publications, some of which are edited by the foremost bible scholars. To supplement this equipment every home should possess a good dictionary and atlas. Then when the reading is understood good selections should be memorized. A great pleasure to aged or ill persons is the ability to recall selections memorized. No matter how tiresome the occupation, or how long the hours, pleasant pictures of what we have read will brighten the surroundings. There is no excuse for lack of suitable reading in any home, but in case one should be cut off from these sources of reading, and have a bible in his possession, he would have the Book of Books indeed. For several generations the only book the people of New England knew was the bible. They studied the alphabet, learned to read from it, and committed large parts of it to memory. It was from among these people whose minds were filled with the beautiful language of the bible, that Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Lowell, Holmes, Emerson, Thoreau, and many other famous authors were inspired and educated to their literary work. Senator Beveridge has pronounced the bible the best and most fascinating body of literature in the world. It contains the records of the most significant history, statesmanship, and diplomacy. It touches every note in the scale of human experience. It is rich in gems of inspiring poetry, splendid oratory, discriminating essays, practical philosophy, and is the world's best compendium of short stories.

He also advises every law student who has ever consulted him, to study the laws of Moses before he begins his Blackstone, and keep on studying the laws of Moses after he has finished his law course. As may be inferred from this our civic laws are founded on the Mosaic laws, and in all history mankind has not succeeded in improving upon them, as they cover every conceivable complication in human relationship. All books that bring us into sympathy and harmony with God's Book, whether they be of science, history, or books of philosophers, poets, sages, or saints, are good books to have in our homes and in our hearts.

To the Public.

[The following article is published as an advertisement.—Ed.] George W. Osgood, candidate for Assembly, of this county, was born at Buck Mills (Venango) now Forest county, Pa., on July 4, 1852. As a candidate it is fair that the people should know something of his life and service in the past. His father, Hiram Osgood, was an old and respected lumberman and farmer, who was born at Osgood Island, in the same township. He is also a grandson of that well known pioneer, Amzy Purdy, who was one of the earliest and most prominent settlers in the Tionesta valley. George W. made his first trip on Tionesta Creek when he was but a youth of nine years of age, and made a trip to Pittsburg, when he was but twelve. He attended the common schools diligently and acquired as good a business education as they afforded. Later in life he always took a great interest in schools, as he was chosen for several years a school director by his fellow citizens. Becoming a pilot on the creek when but fourteen years of age, running rafts for Mr. White, jobber for Wheeler, Dusenbury & Co., he followed the creek and river, piloting rafts and boats numberless times almost up to the present.

He has held many offices of trust in the county. When only twenty-one years of age he was appointed tax collector, and during his life long residence in Kingsley of about fifty years, held many township offices, performing his duties faithfully. In 1902 he was elected State Delegate to the Republican convention held at Harrisburg. In 1903-4 he served as Chairman of the Republican County Committee. So this record shows that he has always been useful as a township officer, true to his constituents and party affiliations during his whole life which has been within the borders of Forest county.

REPUBLICANS will bear in mind that next Saturday is Primary election day. There should be no absentee on this occasion, as the question of who your candidates are to be is a very important one to the party. Every Republican should feel a great privilege as well as his bounden duty to turn out and cast his ballot for the man of his choice, for in this way alone can satisfactory candidates be named. Let no ordinary matter keep you away from the polls next Saturday. The polls will be open from 2:00 o'clock till 8:00 in the evening. A big turnout means a good ticket for the fall election.

Over 100 guests at the Lafayette Hotel, Meadville, were compelled to make hurried exit in their night clothes early Saturday morning when fire destroyed the hotel square, causing a loss estimated at $100,000. The insurance on the several properties destroyed is $7,500. The fire broke out at 2:45 in the morning.

OIL GUSHER ON CHURCH LOT

Services Had to Be Abandoned, but Congregation May Now Pay Its Debts.

Butler, April 7.—Sunday services of the Reformed congregation at Petersville, in the "cabbage patch" oil field, were interfered with through the striking of a gusher by the Acorn Oil company on the church lot within 50 feet of the edifice.

The well came in Saturday evening and made a fine flow during the night and in the morning, rendering it necessary to work a large force Sunday to take care of the oil. The well is a God-send to a struggling congregation with a heavy church debt.

The trustees, who brought discussion in the congregation by leasing the ground for oil speculation, are jubilant today and several members of the flock who declared it wrong to drill for oil on the property are reported to have changed their minds.

The gusher, it is predicted, will yield enough revenue to pay off the church debt and the pastor's salary, and provide money to keep up the church expenses.

There is already talk of raising the pastor's salary and erecting a new parsonage. "The well may settle to a 100-barrel producer."
