est county at the primaries June 5, 1909.

"AT any rate Roosevelt was President while he was occupying the White House; we admire him for that," says the Oglethorpe Ga. Echo. He was that very thing -and then some!

"Will the republic endure?" inquires Mr. Thomas W. Lawson. The fact that it has endured Mr. Lawson so long ought to be proof positive of its abundant ability to stand anything. "SENATOR SMITH of South Carolina, went up to see the President yesterday, and lost his hat in consequence," says the Charleston Post. Senators have been known to lose their heads in that locality, too-but not lately.

Han the kidnappers remained sober they might not have peen apprehended. So booze played a prominent part in the capture. What kind of Prohibition argument is this?—Oil City Blizzard.

First rate argument we should say. At least as good as the school boy advanced in his essay on fishing hooks. They'd "saved many a poor fellow's life by-not swallowing 'em' paragraph from the Blizzard has doubtless animated the minds of hundreds of days: "There is a general feeling of disgust expressed over the manner in which the kidnappers fell down, in the culmination of their enterprise, at Cleveland, after carrying it out so cleverly up to the closing chapter. Publishers, who had about doubled their editions while the sensation continued, are particularly indignant, and naturally think that Boyle and his temale companion deserve severe punishment if for no other reason than making such a fizzle of it."

The advantages accruing to the rural communities that would result are obvious.

It appears that the kidnspping of Billie Whitla was planned by a woman. The woman appears to be well educated and refined in manner, and says she spent fifteen years of her life in a convent in Pennsylvania. She is a tall blonde, 25 years old, and says she was never in trouble before. Kidnapping in this country is an extremely precarions business. There is almost no chance at all to get ransom money and get away with it. This fact is recognized by the most daring and skillful criminals, and only igporant amateurs or people befuddled by drink would take the desperate chances that the crime involves .- Punxy Spirit.

"What sort of a President will Taft make?" asks Leslie's Weekly, and then proceeds to answer its own question in this way: "He will not split his party as Cleveland did, He will not quarrel with Senator Aldrich, as Mr. Cleveland quarreled with Senator Gorman. On the other hand he will probably not be as easy-going or as soft-speaking as McKinley, and there will, perhaps, be many times when those who oppose him will feel the Clevelandesque outburst of indignation. The country is likely to bail him with generous acclaim, and Congress will be happy sometimes and sometimes be unhappy. But one thing seems certain-Taft will be his own President, and stand in no one else's shadow."

On first thought it strikes one as strange why our laws do not provide the death penalty for kidnappers, but on due reflection we are inclined to agree with this view of the matter which finds expression in a number of exchanges: Some ten years ago, when the present law was put on the books, the House at Harrisburg passed the act with the extreme penalty sttsched. The Senate did the same thing, but Senator Grady, of Philadelphia, asked a reconsideration, stating that when Charlie Ross was stolen (and probably kept on a barge on the river till he died from the rough experience) he had been an active worker in the efforts to recover the child and that in that experience he learned much. It was Senator Grady's view that if the death penalty were provided, any kidnappers closely pursued would, having nothing to lose, kill his prisoner in order to help his own escape. To avoid this the penalty was made, as it now stands, a life term or less. It is hard now stands now stands now now stands now to see how any other plan could be by J. R. Morgan.

If we leave thugs noth- Shoots Father-in-Law and Tries Suicide ing to hope for, they will kill, and if we leave the matter open, the tendency will be to treat the victims carefully and keep them alive at any cost. The sentences the stealers of the Whitla child will get, when convicted, will not make the criminals the envy of other thurs.

Tuesday night of last week L. F. Hodges, in a fit of rage, shot his father-in-law, A. P. Why the Fitting of Glasses is Not the Practice of Medicine.

Synopsis of Argument by August C Morck, Oil City, Pa., before the Senate Committee on Public Health, March 23, Optically speaking, the Eye is like a camera, because it possesses both a lightbending and a light registering apparatus. In a camera, the light-registering plate, or focal screen, is chemically sensitized. In an Eye, it is nervously sensitized, thereby communicating impressions made by waves of light to the brain, in a similar manner to the action of the sensory nerves of the skin in communicating a touch of the hand to the brain. An Eye can be born imperfectly shaped, as well as a nose or an ear, or foot, and still be considered a healthy organ free from disease. The Eye, like a camera, in order to do good work must have its lightbending and light-registering apparatus in perfect adjustment to each other.

It, for instance, an Eye is abnormally shaped, or, in other words, the Antero-Posterior diamster of the Eye is too short or too long, vision is maintained through an excessive exertion of the Cilliary muscles which govern the focal power of the Eye, This continuous exertion causes 'Eye strain' and its trains of headaches and other nervous reflexes, the same as leg or any other muscles, can produce neryous reflexes. In one case a pair of glasses serves to bend the rays of light visual functions without excessive effort. vice, and then these aids belong under From the time of the invention of spectacles, 1299 A. D., up to to about 1850, with but a very few exceptions, nearly all of the scientific achievements pertaining to optics were discovered by opticians and astronomers. At this time observing oculists noted that the wearing of glasses did more than just aid the eyesight, and consequently they annexed the work of the optician to his practice and began to mands that he be given a good big slice of fit glasses. And now these oculists say it. Had he not been alert and onto his that if glasses relieve headache then they job the Boyles would have been out of must per force be medicine. But we the city and probably safe from detection, optometrists reply that if the practice of as they seemed to have everything in optometry is the practice of medicine why readiness to "fly the coop."

Optometry is the practice of medicine why don't medical colleges teach it? For a number of years poisonous drugs were number of years poisonous drugs were took the needle to Mr. Thompson, who second series bonds unso THE thought expressed in the following used to prepare healthy Eyes for optical measurements and some of the oculists are still using the same old Rip Van newspaper readers during the past ten Winkle methods. It is now known, however, that more perfect results can be achieved without these "drops," than with them, providing the operator understands and uses the Dynamic Method of Retinoscopy. You ask why don't oculists use this method Gentlemen, this system is the discovery of A. Jay Cross, a New York Optometrist of the highest rank, a "Marconi" in the science of optics, so we presume it would not be considered ethical to adopt a method that was originated by an optometrist. Another argument of the Oculists is that diseases of the Eyes can only be recognized by an oculist. This is a presumption, for which the modern improved instruments that are used to explore the inner Eye any intelligent optometrist can recognize a diseased Eye as readily as any one, but as optometrists do not treat diseases these cases are turned over to not nor will not go to a charitable Eye hospital to be practiced on by an incompe-tent post graduate student, must either remain partially blind or pay medical fees for mechanical work. I am pleased to state that the better class of oculists and most all of the regular practitioners of medicine are not in sympathy with a bill that will put optometrists out of business as the most of these doctors send their re fraction work to the optometrists for the simple reason that they are too busy practicing medicine and with their microscope looking for more life-destroying agencies. In recent researches they have found so many new ones that they name them after cities and countries; for in-stance, there is the "Germacide" from Germany, "Pariscide," from Paris, and the "Microbe" from Irland, and I want to state right here that we have as high a Venango class of medical doctors in Ve county as can be found any where. Gentlemen, I will not delay you any longer. I have the utmost confidence in this Committee to give us a "square deal" and that you will make laws that wil protect the people generally and not cater to the whims of a few disgruntled oculists who are trying to usurp the traditional rights of a craft that has done so much in the uplifting of optometry and science in general and who have served

The Kidnappers in Limbo.

James H. Boyle and wife, captured in Cleveland Tuesday of last week as the kidnappers of Willie Whitla, the little Sharon boy, now languish in the Mercer jail, where a heavy guard will be kept over them pending their trial which will take place at the next session of sourt on the third Monday of April. Boyle, the the third Monday of April. Boyle, the principal in this miserable tragedy, was reared in Sharon, where he resided until six years ago, and where his mother and several brothers and sisters still reside, being looked upon as among the most respectable people of the place, the kidnapper being the black sheep of the flock. The woman who claims to be his wife is thought to be the daughter of a man named McDermont, a respected citizen of named McDermont, a respected citizen of Chicago. They say they have been mar-ried about a year, and spent several weeks in Sharon about the holidays. Just what sort of pleas they will adopt in their defense is not known as neither have employed counsel, but it is probable the woman will claim she was coerced into receiving the boy and taking care of him pending his return to his parents, in which case the man would take all the blame upon himself in hope of clearing the woman. The authorities, however feel confident of conviction in both cases and the general opinion is that both will suffer the full penalty of their crime. Nothing less will satisfy the public which has a right to expect the full measure of justice to be meted out to them if proven guilty of this foul crime.
