MILLINERY

Is at the Zenith of Its Spring Beauty.

Hats are here in gorgeous array—every shape, every style that is to be the least bit fashionable. It has been by all odds so far our best millinery season. Yet the stock is so large, and the assortment so broad, at every price, that there is plenty choosing for all comers. You are not confined in your choice here to just a few of the popular shapes—for we have given the broadest possible latitude to our trimmers and designers—with a result that is startling and superb. Likewise, the many Hats that have come to us from most prominent foreign and American designers—they too take on a degree of variation that is extraordinary and unusual. Choose early if you possibly can. Prices begin at $5, at which there is good assortment of styles; a much broader selection at $7.50 and $10—and then on and up the price ladder to as much as you'll care to pay for exclusiveness and extravagance of style.

The Cutest "Lids" for the Cutest "Kids." $1.00.

A one dollar bill brings you your choice of several hundred of the prettiest, neatest little trimmed hats you have ever seen. How can we afford to sell them at so small a price? That's what everybody asks. It's a wonder to you, but it's a greater wonder to our competitors. They can't understand how we can sell the same hats for $1 that they are obliged to pay twice that for. Just the same, we do it every season. The youngsters are great friends of ours. We always look out for their interests

SILVERBROOK

By Eva Gormley. Original.

"You can never be anything in this small village." How these words resounded in Dorothea's ears. That morning her music teacher had complimented her on a piece of music which she had composed herself; he also offered her a brilliant opening at the Music Academy in a great distant city. Dorothea had concluded to accept the offer, after some meditation. After the professor's departure, however, he half regretted her reply, for she loved the dear, little native village, with its kindly inhabitants and pretty scenery. That was not all she must leave behind, for there was the patient invalid mother, two brothers and—Ralph, the playmate of her earlier days. That wave of homesickness already engulfed her, but she hastily put these sad thoughts away, replacing them by ones of a more brilliant tone.

She imagined herself in the great academy, playing her latest composition in music before an enthusiastic audience; she heard the applause, the encores—certainly this step that she was about to take offered a more inviting future than did the quiet, quaint, hid-away town of Silverbrook. So Dorothea really started the following week. The mother and brothers had felt loth to part for even a year from the favorite of the farmhouse, to say nothing of Ralph who tried in vain to dissuade her from it, but fame and ambition always cause separations.

The academy was dazzling with lights and was crowded with an expectant throng of music lovers. They were all anxious to see the new musician who was to appear that night; their wish was soon fulfilled, for that person, none other than Dorothea Oliver, lightly stepped on the stage, seated herself at the piano and commenced to arrange the music. Her heart beat, her fingers trembled this was her opening.

"Play 'Silverbrook' when you have finished all the others. It will captivate the audience with its charm and simplicity," the professor said softly as Dorothea struck the first bars of the classic piece, for she was not only going to play her own compositions, but those of others. The music sounded well the people applauded, but Dorothea felt she had not done her best.

The last piece, "Silverbrook," was reached. The professor stepped out and gave a short explanation of the music, communicating to the audience the fact that the composition was to bring to the mind a picture of country beauty. Now the young musician had played "Silverbrook" many times without feeling any particular emotion, so she placed the piece before her almost listlessly.

As the music reached its full melody Dorothea felt herself carried back to the village she had so recently left. The music was so skillfully arranged that it brought a minute picture to the mind with each measure.

Dorothea lost herself; she saw the pretty little bay that bathed the shores of Silverbrook; she saw the maple and fir trees rising in majesty on the background. Then, as the music softened, the tiny silver brook glided before her with crystal smoothness, laughing merrily over its stone-paved floor. The song of the birds came in a glad, swelling chorus now the trees rustled with a mystic, plaintive sound. Last of all Dorothea could see a sweet-faced lady seated beneath the shady elms, two brothers sad and lonely—and Ralph, disconsolate and weary.

Tears streamed down Dorothea's cheeks; tears coursed freely in the audience. Part of the picture had been made clear to them, but the saddest, saddest portion had touched Dorothea's heart. She hastened from the stage, while the professor explained her non-appearance to the encores to be due to her youth and strangeness. The warm-hearted audience in that great city never saw how "Silverbrook's" composer rushed gladly into the waiting arms of a certain person that very next day, for after all fame and fortune could not bring her the joy of home at Silverbrook.

RALPH REASONED WITH HER.

REMARKABLE.
About six weeks ago a swelling came in my groin 2 1/2 inches from my navel about the size of a half lemon very painful and said to be caused by blood poison. I doctored about six weeks, and was getting worse, when Mr. Brown told me about San-Cura Ointment. I applied it as a poultice, changing morning and night, removing all pain at once. In two days it broke, discharging pus. I then changed it once a day until it was perfectly healed. I recommend San-Cura Ointment as the best poultice I ever used. It removes pain and all pus, keeping a sore moist and soft.

SORROW WITH A PURPOSE.

Tears Secured a Bust But Failed to Win a Canvas.

Some months ago the King of England received at his place at Sandringham the King of Greece, who was accompanied by one of his young aides-de-camp. As Edward VII. was doing the honors, exhibiting his gallery, and his guest was admiring a bust of a young woman, the charming work of the sculptor Thornycroft, the King was much surprised at an explosion of sobs. It was the young Captain, who was weeping and who excused himself in these words: "Will your Majesty pardon me? This bust is the perfect image of a sister whom I loved most tenderly. It recalls to me a loss, alas! never to be forgotten."

"In that case," responded the King, gently moved, "permit me to offer it to you."

And through the care of Sir Francis Knollys the marble was transported to the apartment of this sorrowing brother.

Time passed. The young Captain returned to London. Quite recently he visited the admirable collection of the Duke of Cambridge and recognized with renewed sorrow in a canvas of Burne-Jones the features of the angel he had lost.

The Duke perhaps would have had the same generosity as King Edward but some one was present who had witnessed the scene at Sandringham. So the ingenious Greek did not this time carry away any family portrait to his country.—Le Cri de Paris.

Law of Life.
What is the true law of our moral life? That is the question which every age sets itself to solve, and to the solution of which every contribution is welcome. And the answer that George Eliot gives is in the moral as well as in the physical world, and that this law cannot be broken with impunity. "A man soweth so shall he also reap."

The Worst Load.
The worst load a man can carry is that of habits begotten of evil passions—that growing pile of sensuous deeds, which in their accumulation, cohere finally into a mass, devil possessed which sits between his shoulders, over-weighting all else in kind, and driving him ruthlessly, fatefully on the road downward.—Christian World.

Dismal Professions.
The question was recently asked in a newspaper, "What is the most dismal of professions?" Among those that occurred to us as having a claim to be so considered were grave digging, scavenging, listening to Parliamentary orations through an all-night sitting, and the writing of poems—or articles—that nobody reads. The washing of dishes may be made interesting if done scientifically.—British Medical Journal.

Eyesight and Crime.
Many criminals have suffered from eye-strain or some other defect of vision which prevented the exercise of complete self-control. In consequence, habits of drug-taking and alcoholic excess were formed and the moral sense so perverted that crimes of greater or lesser magnitude were committed.—Cassell's Magazine.

The Lure of the City.
City life is like an intoxicant. Once one becomes familiar with the teeming life, the endless variety, the free play of brain and thought, to go back to the stillness of a rural community is like the sudden return to water as a drink after a generous enjoyment of alcohol.—Irish Homestead.

Crimean War.
But for its stirring memories, and better still, its awakening of long-dormant national energy and martial spirit, one could wish that the sanguinary Crimean conflict had not been fought at all.—Sir Horace Rumbold in the National Review.

Watch For the Blind.
A watch for the use of the blind has the hours indicated by movable buttons in relief on the dial. A strong minute hand indicates minutes only, a blind person who passes his hand over the dial finds the button indicating the hours depressed.

Captain on the Bridge.
Captain Watt, of the Lusitania, is not noted for affability. He maintains that the captain's place is on the bridge, not in the saloon, and he believes that he best serves his passengers' interest by insuring their safety rather than by looking after their entertainment.

Death From Nose Bleed.
Arthur Lapalmé, a saloon proprietor, aged 25, is dead at Marquette Hospital from nose bleed. For the last three months he has been afflicted. The flow was at irregular intervals, but with an increase in quantity, and Lapalmé suffered lessening of the intervals until death resulted.

Abstaining Provosts.
A generation ago water-drinking occupants of civil chairs were very rare in Scotland. Total abstainers, however, can claim as a result of the recent elections that 46 Scottish burgs are presided over by abstaining provosts. The list includes Sir William Bisland, Bart, lord provost of Glasgow, and Lord Provost Gibson, Edinburgh.

Best Treatment for Colds.
"Most ordinary colds will yield to the simplest treatment," says the Chicago Tribune, "moderate laxatives, hot foot baths, a free perspiration and an avoidance of exposure to cold and wet after treatment." While this treatment is simple, it requires considerable trouble, and the one adopting it must remain in doors for a day or two, or a fresh cold is almost sure to be contracted, and in many instances pneumonia follows. Is it not better to pin your faith to an old reliable preparation like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, that is famous for its cures of colds and can always be depended upon? For sale by Dunn & Falton.
