TRYING TO PLEASE HIM

To say that Jonzene was annoyed would be stating the situation mildly.

When a man has been married five years and got in the habit of coming home to a house in neat and shining order, an immaculately arranged wife and a piping hot and tempting dinner, with later supplies of evening papers and magazines and slippers, he begins to take these favors as his right. But this time Louise did not meet him at the door and the living room was dark. He stumbled over things while searching for the electric button. When he had turned on the light he blinked at the room dazedly.

A litter of sewing scraps covered the floor; one rubber, three spools of thread and the scissors added to the disarray. Open magazines were on the table and a veil was carelessly wound about a vase on the mantel. The shades were up unevenly and a lace curtain hung crooked. The room had a distinct rowdy and forlorn expression.

Jonzene sat down undecidedly and actually turned pale. Then he became conscious of the stillness that reigned in the kitchen regions. He investigated and found no maid there and not a sign of dinner.

While his surprise was rapidly changing into actual worry he heard Louise's key in the front door. She walked in beaming. There was an airiness about her which her hungry husband felt was out of place under the circumstances.

She threw her gloves on one chair and her hat on another and sat on her new coat, after carelessly slipping it off. Jonzene remained speechless. He wondered if sudden madness had stricken his pretty wife, whose symbol of life was order.

"Don't you like these new shoes of mine?" she asked, eyeing her patent leathers with satisfaction.

"They are all right," said Jonzene. "Are—aren't we going to have dinner to-night?"

Mrs. Jonzene regarded him with a childlike perplexity which also was new. It was as if she had been asked a question in mental arithmetic by a stern teacher. Then apparently realization flooded her mind and she threw up her hands and laughed.

"Well, just fancy!" she cried, merrily. "I had totally forgotten that this was Thursday and Nettie's day out! What do you think of that! I don't suppose there is a scrap in the house to eat!"

Jonzene waited for her as usual to suggest what they should do, but she merely smiled at him as one who is resolved to be good-natured under severe provocation.

"What shall we do?" he heard himself ask.

Mrs. Jonzene hummed a little tune. "My goodness!" she said. "I haven't an idea! Isn't it funny? What had we better do, John?"

Jonzene felt his throat contract at his first logical notion of suggesting that maybe she could manage something in the chafing dish. This suddenly care-free creature and work seemed wholly incompatible.

"We could go to the cafe down the street," he said meekly.

They went and the dinner cost him just $9.30. Louise had betrayed a childish delight in asking for new dishes and had ordered liquid refreshments besides.

When they were at home again Louise went to the piano. Jonzene stealthily pecked up the things on the floor, because being a neat man he could not read in peace with them there.

"Did my shirts come from the laundry?" he asked.

Again his wife turned a beaming face on him and wrinkled her brows. "Goodness! I don't know, John!" she confessed. "I never can remember to bother about those things!"

And this from a woman who had always known by instinct if a button were missing!

"Louise!" cried Jonzene, as with paper in hand, unable to read, he surveyed his wife playing ragtime, though she had always professed to loathe it, "what the dickens is the matter? What has come over you?"

Mrs. Jonzene turned around, still childlike—and then she laughed. The longer she looked at the pathetically harassed face of her husband the harder it was for her to stop.

She sobbed suddenly and spoke in her natural voice.

"Didn't I sit here the other evening," she demanded, "and listen to you raving over Alice Harmon for an hour? Yes, Mr. Smith was talking, too, but you did most of it! You said she was so appealing with her bright childishness and continued gayety and her husband didn't appreciate it. You said you liked a trusting and dependent woman. You said Harmon ought to be glad to think for her and take the responsibility. You mentioned that a true man always felt that way. You added that she was a fascinating creature and Harmon ought to be ashamed of growling. I—I was just giving you a touch of Alice. I wanted to please you. I began to realize how bored you must have been—"

"Louise," broke in Jonzene, with the light of relieved joy in his face, "if you are cruel enough to get back at me like this again and make me think my happy home is wrecked I'll—I'll—consign Alice, anyhow! I take it all back!"

Then Mrs. Jonzene laughed contentedly—in the character of Mrs. Jonzene.—Chicago News.

Blunders of the Types.

Ever since the introduction of typesetting errors, weird or comical, have emanated from printers' offices. The mistakes are not always to be shouldered on to the compositor, for had handwriting must be taken into account. Here are a few instances of actual blunders collected by a proof-reader in the course of his daily work:

"His blushing bride" was transformed into "his blustering bride."

A major was stated to have "served with destruction in the army." The writer thought he used the word "distinction."

"The Galley I Love" was the description of a picture entitled "The Galley Slave."

Speaking of theatrical folk, a critic wrote that "nearly all have husbands or wives." The paragraph printed read "hundreds of wives."

"He called for three days around the cape and finally slaughtered a small Italian" should have been "sighted a small island."

One more in conclusion. "He takes delight in talking on his family shame" was a shameful thing to say when "favorite theme" was meant.

The Best Prize.
A titled Englishman while in Newport talked most entertainingly to a group of ladies about ancestral pride.

"Ancestral pride is an excellent thing," he said, "but there are better things. We have long felt in Great Britain that there are better things. I heard the sentiment rather neatly expressed last season by a duchess. Hers is a great family, but she was talking to a young marquis whose family is incomparably greater. He is a rather worthless, lazy, dissipated young marquis, and he boasted to the duchess about his people."

"I am very proud of my ancestry," you know," he ended.

"Yes," said the duchess, "and you have cause to be, but I wonder how your ancestry would feel about you?"

Half a League.
The class had just finished reciting "The Charge of the Light Brigade."

"Now," said the teacher, "can any one present tell me the meaning of those words, Half a league?"

Up shot the hand of Thomas Jones, aged eleven, football captain and indomitable fullback.

"Please, sir, it means they couldn't get enough clubs to make up the full league."

Not a Bargain.
"Do you think that Miss Kidder was having fun with me?" asked Chawlie.

"Well, old chap, give me the details," was Arthur's response.

"You see, I had my bull terrier with me, and I said to her, 'That dog knows as much as I do.' And she said, 'Don't you think $4.50 was too much to pay for him?'"—Cleveland Leader.

The Right Bone.
"Fred, dear, I feel it in my bones that you are going to take me to the theater tonight."

"Which bone, darling?"

"I'm not sure, but I think it's my wishbone!"—Kansas City Independent.

Chamberlain's Liniment.
This is a new preparation and a good one. It is especially valuable as a cure for chronic and muscular rheumatism, and for the relief from pain which it affords in acute inflammatory rheumatism. Those who have used it have invariably spoken of it in the highest terms of praise. Lame back, lame shoulder and stiff neck are due to rheumatism of the muscles, usually brought on by exposure to cold or damp, and are quickly cured by applying this liniment freely and massaging the affected parts. Soreness of the muscles, whether induced by violent exercise or injury, is allayed by this liniment. For sale by Dunn & Fulton.
