These Are the LAST DAYS

To pick ripe cherries from the June White Sale tree and the fruit is delicious.

Last week has set up a sales record that is very high; one that we are more than proud of. Undermuslins, White Goods and Linens have had a mighty week, far in excess of what we believed it possibly could be.

House Furnishings do not suffer by comparison—a good many hundred linen closets have been newly equipped from here.

All the little lots that remain must scamper away at some price or other.

Those who have waited until now to purchase will find a countless number of economies that are worth while.

Warm Weather Dresses Reign Supreme.

Simple One-Piece Dresses have taken the eastern cities by storm and Oil City is not so very far behind in grasping at this popular style for warm weather wear. We have noticed the demand increasing daily, and have made ample preparations to meet the demand when it reaches its height. New lots of these dresses arrive daily, so that we can show you more than 500 Women's and Misses' Dresses. Surely from such an assortment of styles and materials, from such a range of prices as it represented, you can find something to suit you.

Millinery Now Less Than Half.

The near approach of warm weather calls for a prompt clearance of our stock. We've started with an immense price slump. Children's Hats, already trimmed, that are worth $2 and more, are all marked 50 cents. Women's $5 Hats are now $2, and a creditable assortment of styles at that. Flowers are half price, wigs are half price, and all colored and some black untrimmed hats are sold at 25 cents.

PROTECTION STILL THE CRY

Radical Tariff Revisionists Oft Reminded That a Return of Soup House Days Is Not Wanted

SENATOR PENROSE'S POSITION

States in Few Crisp Sentences the Important Place Pennsylvania Occupies and Shows How Policy He Is Following Brings Greatest Good to Greatest Number.

It can not fail to be gratifying to the great population of Pennsylvania classed as wage-earners to note that the so-called "progressive Republican" senators, led by Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, have been meeting with repeated defeats of late in their efforts to incorporate in the Aldrich bill now under consideration in the United States Senate, amendments which have a tendency to revise the tariff downward.

The fundamental principle involved in tariff legislation is to levy such duties upon manufactured goods of all kinds and all materials that we, as a Nation, can produce, furnish and manufacture, as will protect the American wage-earner, male and female, against the cheap pauper labor of European countries; and, second, to secure the markets of this country for the products of the farms and manufacturing of the country. The commerce and markets of this country are worth more to the farmers and manufacturers of the United States than several hundred times that of the other markets of the world.

It has been wisely and truly stated by the Keystone Gazette of Bellefonte that those who advocate a revision of the tariff downward are strongly tinged with free trade theories, and are governed by the idea that the question of the tariff is a local issue only. A tariff without being dominated by the principle of protection is a direct blow at the wage-earners of the country, and is an attempt to reduce the American wage-earners to the same level and condition of the wage-earners and serfs of European countries. This cannot be done without endangering the stability and best interest of the Nation.

In this country the wage-earners constitute the majority of the sovereigns of the land. They vote, and at the polls exercise a power equal to that of any other citizen in the land. In the European countries they have practically no voice in the control of their governments. This country will only be strong and capable and stable to the extent that its sovereign power, which is the people, is intelligent, thrifty, patriotic and loyal to its institutions.

To undertake to legislate with a view of enforcing idleness, poverty and wretchedness upon a majority of the people who constitute the sovereign power of the land means to weaken that power and to invite discontent that will seriously affect the stability of the government and the country.

Continuing the Keystone Gazette says: "What will it profit the farmer or the manufacturer if the wage-earners are enforced to be idle, or to work at wages that are practically starvation for an American citizen? If wages are not earned the power of consumption is reduced as well as the means of purchasing the products of the farm at fair prices, as well as the products of the mills and manufacturing.

"This country had an experience of a revision of tariff downwards under the Wilson tariff bill of 1893, under the second Cleveland administration. What was the condition of things then? The farmers had no market for the stock or products; the mills and manufacturing were largely out of business and idle because there was no home or foreign market for their products.

"The country does not want another four years' experience such as it had from 1893 to 1897—with its reign of soup houses, fifty-cent wheat and corn used for fuel. Then let the Senators and Congress drop the game of politics and legislate on the tariff question on the broad plane of protection to American industry—and especially to the American wage-earners, men and women, and seek to elevate and improve the sovereigns of this country so as to insure its continued prosperity and its stability as a free republic, and the perpetuation of our free institutions, seeking to elevate the standard of citizenship and better the condition of all the people."

The immensity to which the tariff question has grown at home may be estimated by comparison with the three greatest manufacturing countries on the globe. In 1900 the value of production in the United States equaled that of the United Kingdom, Germany and France together. In this enormous aggregate Pennsylvania in 1905 represented about one-seventh of the value of the entire United States. Setting aside New York which stands about equal with Pennsylvania, all other States are far in arrears, most of them practically not in sight.

Senator Penrose, always mindful of the almost inconceivable importance of the tariff to the people and interests of Pennsylvania, has all the time during this session been watching with closest attention every move in amendment and debate. He favors what the people of Pennsylvania want and proposes to exert every effort to see that they get it, not by speech-making but by results. By way of comment, however, with respect to the relation of Pennsylvania to mechanical industries in general and as affected by tariff legislation, Senator Penrose recently delivered a speech in which he said:

"The first importance of Pennsylvania in mechanical industries in the United States, in the world, in fact, is due not only to natural advantages but to the enterprise and energy of her people, who are making the most of them. In the canvass of establishments under the factory system in 1905, which does not include neighborhood industries and hand trades, Pennsylvania reported 52,185 establishments, or nearly one-fourth the total for the United States. The amount of capital employed was but four million short of two billion dollars, about one-sixth of the whole country. The amount of wages paid was three hundred and sixty-eight million dollars. The wage-earners numbered nearly 800,000 and the value of products was close to two billion dollars. With such home figures before us it is not necessary to spend time arguing about the tariff. I believe in protection in every form, not only to sustain our own industries, but to protect our own people in earning the best wages the legitimate profits of manufacturers will afford.

"Localities having comparatively little at stake and, as they imagine, nothing to lose, forget that the tariff is and always has been since the second bill enacted by the first Congress of the United States a national measure. Their prosperity is due to the fact that rates are fixed with reference to interest and revenue of the whole country and not part of it. The national wealth and high prices for the products of our farms is due to the great development of our manufacturing which create demand beyond the narrow limits of the household. Without manufacturing industries and their army of wage-earners and dependent individuals and occupations, the products of the farm would have small demand. To Pennsylvania this means a great deal, as the aggregate production in 1907 of the principal cereal crops was greater in that State than in any New England, Middle, South Atlantic or Gulf State except Texas. Without a protective tariff the products of the agricultural States would be a drug on the market.

"For such substantial reasons I favor a continuance of a strong policy of protection and support it in the Senate bill where it answers that purpose, or by amendment, as in hosiery or any other item, when necessary to give strength to such interests either in production or conservation of the wage-earners."

Falls on Sponge Cake.
Mrs. Tom L. Johnson, discussing the other day the school of household science that she is helping to found in Cleveland, said:

"No Cleveland girl, after a course in our school, would ever make the mistake that a young bride made last Thanksgiving.

"This young bride, after serving to her husband a Thanksgiving dinner that was so-so, said, as the dessert of mince pie was brought:

"I intended, dear, to have some sponge cake, too, but it has been a total failure."

"How was that? the husband asked in a disappointed tone, for he was fond of sponge cake.

"The druggist," she explained, "sent me the wrong kind of sponges."—Indianapolis Star.
