Church Dedication on Church Hill.
 The new Evangelical church on Church Hill, Hickory township, was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies last Sunday. The services of the day were in charge of Rev. J. W. Richards, of Johnstown, Pa., Presiding Elder of the Pittsburgh District, Pittsburgh Conference of the Evangelical Association, who was assisted by the pastor, Rev. J. C. Cusick, of Lickingville, Pa. At 10:30 a. m. the presiding elder delivered an excellent sermon, using for his theme the text as found in Rev. 3:8: "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." He preached again in the evening at 7:30, this being followed by the dedication services according to the ritual of the church.
 The new building is a very pretty structure and stands on a slightly elevated location across the road from the Church Hill school house. The lot on which it stands was donated by Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Church. The building is 23x33 feet, with a bell tower and steeple, and has stained glass windows. It has a comfortable seating capacity of about 125 and cost close to $1,200. This does not include a large amount of work which was donated by residents of the community. It contains also a good organ. The church was formerly the one standing at Town Line, near Whig Hill, which was torn down and rebuilt on the present location. A reservation in the deed to the Evangelical Association states that should the association cease to hold services there, the property will revert to the citizens of the community on the payment of a merely nominal sum which the association has invested in it. A balance of about $250 due on the property was raised in a short time Sunday by subscription. A goodly number of the residents of the community were present to witness the happy culmination of the project for which they have labored so earnestly and sacrificed. Services will be held there on the second and fourth Sundays of each month at 11 a. m.

The Slaughter of Game.
 The Oil City Derrick of yesterday, after giving a long list of hunters seen in that city Monday night after a day's hunt, proceeds to give the "game boys" this righteous roast. Some of the hunters mentioned by the Derrick spent the day in the woods surrounding Oil City, but most of them had come in on the night train from up-river points. The Derrick says:
 "The accounts of animals and birds killed in the foregoing is accurate and includes only such hunters as were seen bringing their game to town by railroad, by buggy or by portage. There is no room for argument. The record is but a small portion of the actual slaughter of small game in this section and it naturally leads to the inquiry on the part of the lover of nature if the state instead of being too conservative as the game hog complains was not too liberal in fixing the maximum of birds and mammals that can be killed during one season. With 10 rabbits to each gun, five ruffed grouse, ten woodcock and six squirrels there seems to be all the opportunity the most bloodthirsty hunter alive would need to satisfy him. How game is to be propagated if the present death rate is permitted by law seems to be a question of concern to every real sportsman. Summarized the record for Monday shows: Rabbit, 137; pheasants, 156; squirrel, 51; woodcock, 3."

The Dirigible in War.
 Airships designed for offensive military operations will be designed larger than those built for commercial purposes, because they must navigate at greater altitudes to be beyond the point-blank range of artillery fire. The reason for enlarging them is that they must have more space in which the gas can expand when they rise into the lower air-pressure of the higher regions. An airship intended to make an attack will fight from 1500 yards for its own protection, but it must watch the fluctuation of its gas-supply. It is perfectly feasible to do this by inflating the chambers to only a fraction of their capacity before ascending; this provides for the expansion of the gas to its highest lifting capacity at the very time it is in the midst of an engagement. The ship is so large that, with the assistance of the horizontal rudders, it can lift its full complement, without losing stability or speed. Its attack will always be rapid and of short duration because of the effective execution it may be expected to wield with the guns that have been developed by the Krupps for the use of airships.—American Reviews of Reviews for November.

The remarkable homogeneity of the people of the United States is a source of wonder to all who visit this country. In spite of the half million or so of immigrants received from all the nations of the earth every year, we assimilate them so rapidly that there is a constant appearance of oneness all over the country. The Philadelphia Ledger says: "At a time when in Europe national and racial dissimilarities are asserting themselves what makes for this oneness in America? One universal factor that especially promotes unconscious imitation 395 days in the year, by an overwhelming uniformity on every breakfast table and around the evening lamp by night, is the American newspaper. Complemented weekly and monthly by the magazine, this amazing publicity which leaves no part of the United States in ignorance of what the other parts are doing, works its wonders."
