the inquest, but suspicion at once centered upon one William Barnhart, an irresponsible character who had infested that section for some time, and had often made his home at the Porter farm. This man, half erazy, and more than half conning and devilish, had threatened the lives of several persons in the neighborhood, and was known to have harbored ill feeling toward Turner. He was not so crazy but that he knew what he had done, and at once was found missing, having almost succeeded in making good his escape from the neighborhood. He was traced into Jefferson county and overhauled on the road leading from Clarington to Strattonville, by Henry Balley, who, with James K. Clark of Barnett township, brought him to Ticnesta, and at a hear ing before Justice D. S. Knox was bound ver without bail.

His trial began on the 28th day of Deember, 1871, before Judge Wetmore, who held his first court in Forest county at that time. His associates on the bench were J. A. Proper and Andrew Cook. The attorneys for the prosecution were District Attorney W. W. Mason, W. P. Mercilliott and ex-Judge S. P. Johnson. The prisoner was defended by Samuel D. Irwin and B. J. Reed. Has Forest County Anthrax ?

About a year ago three cows it the vicinity of Lynch, Forest county, Pa., were taken sick and died within a short time and a man named Culbertson cut one of them open and took out the intestines. Mr. Culbertson had a small abrasion on one hand and this became poisoned and within three days from that time he died, says the Warren Mirror. The latter part of last week several cows were taken sick and as the symptoms were similar to those a year ago, the owners, who had learned wisdom from the death of Mr. Culbertson, called Dr. M. J. Chrisman of this city. The doctor pronounced the disease as anthrax and removed sections of the spleen and liver of one of the animals and forwarded them to the state livestock sanitary board at Harrisburg and Saturday received word that the disease was undoubtedly anthrax and that they were forwarding a liberal supply of anthrax vaccine No. 1 and the
