When Charles Russo and his family returned to their home in Koppel, Pa., after visiting New York they discovered that the roof of their house was gone and that every article of furniture, including a cook stove, and cooking utensils, was missing.
A search in nearby homes, it is alleged, revealed furniture, pictures and dishes belonging to Russo. Russo visited Justice of the Peace Sturgeon and swore out a search warrant.

MIGHTY BLOW HIT AT BECKER

"Jack" Rose Puts Rosenthal Murder on Policeman

WITNESS ON STAND 12 HOURS

"Bald Jack" Swears That Becker Contrived and Ordered Killing of Gambler—Rose Tells of His Own Part.

"Jack" Rose told a marvelous story and was a terrible witness against Lieutenant Becker, the New York police lieutenant charged with the murder of Herman Rosenthal.

Without hesitating, without stopping to weigh his words, without the slightest emotion, he swore that Becker ordered and contrived the murder of Herman Rosenthal to prevent exposure as a blackmailer; that Becker gloated over the death of Rosenthal's body as it lay in the police station and that Becker paid for the murder and tried for a time to protect the murderers.

The climax of probably the most remarkable and coherent confession of crime ever heard in these courts was Rose's recital of what he swore were Becker's own words when the lieutenant, in reply to Rose's question as to whether or not he had seen the body, is alleged to have said:

"It was a pleasing sight to me to look and see that squealing there, and if it was not for the presence of the district attorney I would have cut his tongue out as a warning to future squealers."

Becker did not blanch or quail. But he was visibly exerting tremendous self-control. His jaw set like a rock. You could see the muscles stiffen. Sweat streamed from his face. One hand gripped his chair, the other the table in front of him.

Utterly self-possessed, grave at all times, as calm as if telling a story to friends in a gambling parlor, never excited or frustrated or taken back; deferential to justice and counsel; wholly without visible emotion, Rose talked for upward of twelve hours never faltering, hardly pausing.

The main points of his testimony had been public news but to these points he added others. He amplified amazingly all that had been known. He supplied details out of an apparently marvelous memory. Called upon often to repeat Becker's exact words he was never at a loss.

He put the full responsibility for the crime upon Becker, but he did not attempt to hide his own participation. Becker was the director. He was the agent.

Becker and his lawyers were struck with amazement when Morris Luban, a witness on whom they had depended for testimony that he overheard Rose, Webber, Vallon and Schepps plotting the murder of Herman Rosenthal and threatening to kill Becker if he interfered, swore that he heard Becker in the steam room of the Lafayette baths two or three weeks before the murder upbraiding Rose and threatening to kill Rosenthal with his own hands.

"I know it's the last of me," whispered Luban to a court attendant, but there was no tremor in his voice when he looked steadily at Becker a few minutes later and testified: "Mr. Becker said: 'If that Rosenthal is not croaked I will croak him myself.'"

Luban looked in the face of "Whitey" Lewis and named "Whitey" as one of the four whom he saw shooting Rosenthal. Luban then came along and not only identified all four of the gunmen and Shapiro, the chauffeur, but delivered against Becker the first testimony connecting him with the murder.

The gunmen railed against him. The voice of "Lefty Louie" rose to a screech. He was protesting against the method of identification. When Luban had finished the gunmen had lost a measure of their defiance. As for Becker the sweat was streaming on his face. He seemed to have aged.

Lawyer McIntyre strived hard to discredit the witness. Again and again the lawyer drove Luban over the trail of his story. It was all to no purpose.

DEMAND EXCEEDS SUPPLY

Shortage of Cars and Labor Embarrasses Business.

Dun's Review of Trade says this week: "In every section and in every branch of trade activity in production and distribution prevails.

"It is notable that in the principal trades and especially in iron and steel, actual buoyancy appears and the demand is so keen that it tests the capacity of productive and transporting facilities. Shortage of cars and labor, and in some cases even shortage of plant capacity, are now the most embarrassing problems confronting business men."

SUICIDE PACT PROBABLY

Man and Wife Found Dead With Slashed Throats.

It is believed that Tucker first cut his wife's throat and then ended his own life. There was no evidence in the room of a struggle.

There is, perhaps, no more important single article of feminine wearing apparel. Certainly none that contributes nearly so much toward the appearance of the individual figure. An article then that should be selected with greatest care and discrimination.

For the Corset does, beyond all question, mould the figure. What will you have then? A Corset that has no claim to distinction or one universally recognized and accepted as the peer of all others to mould and develop the correct style figure?

Madam, that Corset is on sale right here in Oil City. "Nemo" is the name of it and "The Kinter Co." have the exclusive sale for it here.

Twelve models among which you will find one especially designed to suit the requirements of your figure.
