This sort of performance on the part of the weather has helped out amazingly on the ice harvest a very nice quality of clear ice of 6 to 8 inches in thickness being garnered, and those who got onto the job early and stayed by it assiduously have their houses pretty well filled up. The prospective ice famine for next summer is thus practically averted.

Piano Recital.

A large representative and appreciative udience gathered at the studio of the Philomel Wednesday afternoon, to hear recital given by their accomplished non-resident member, Miss Olive Lanson, of Tione-ta, assisted by her friend, Mrs. Cora Watson Feit of the same place. Mayburg Dwelling House Burned.

The dwelling house owned and occupied by Charles Irwin at Mayburg was totally consumed by fire, together with all the household goods and contents last Thursday forenoon. A young daughter, with two smaller children, was in the house when it took fire and she rescued the little ones. Before assistance arrived the flames had gathered such headway as to preclude the saving of any of the household effects. The fire was caused by a window curtain coming in contact with an open-front gas stove. Mr. Irwin's loss is between $400 and $500, with no insurance.

Mayburg Resident Burned to Death. By the burning of the Shaw House, one of Sheffield's principal hotels, Friday night last, Joseph Gregory, employed as setter on the lumber mill at Mayburg, this county, was burned to death. The fire broke out shortly after midnight, having started near the furnace in the basement, and burned so rapidly that many of the inmates and guests were driven out in their night clothes. The fact of the young man's death was not positively known until eleven o'clock Saturday morning when his body, burned to a mere mass, was found and taken from the ruins in a blanket. It was known that he had been a guest of the hotel in the evening, but he had intended to go over to the new mill boarding house to spend the night and had gone some distance on the way, when on account of the severe cold he changed his mind and returned to the hotel for the night which proved to be his death trap. He occupied room in the second story and had retired about 11 o'clock, and had probably ust gotten soundly asleep. It is thought be was suffocated in bed and had not been able to move when the flames enveloped him,

About ten o'clock Saturday evening

the cry of fire was heard, Soon bells

rang and the whistles blew and every body started on the run to see where the tire was. It was soon discovered that the old school building was on fire, and a large crowd, both men and women, was on the scene. There were two school buildings standing thirty-six feet apart in one yard, one containing six rooms and the other one school room and the laboratory, and the latter was the one burning. The fire is supposed to have started from an overheated stove in the laboratory, the gas which had been very weak for several days coming on with considerable pressure during the evening. When discovered the flames had made great headway on the second floor and very little could be done toward saving the building, which was entirely destroyed, with the coal shed which stood nearby. The water was frozen up and the town pump could not be found and there was no way to fight the fire only with water carried in pails from the creek and nearby residences. The main fight was put up in saving the new building and if the wind had not favored them it could not have been saved with the means at hand to fight the fire. The fire was kept from this building by the valiant efforts of the crowd and the damage was confined to a scorching on one side and a few broken windows. Although there were men enough on the scone to have almost spatted out the fire with their hands, they were unable to do anything to saye the old building on account of the lack of means to work with. The windows, books, stoves, table, organ and a few desks were saved from the lower room, but only a few articles were gotten out of the laboratory. The building was a substantial two-story frame and the loss is quite a heavy one to the school district, but there was an insurance of $1,300 on the building and $200 on the contents. The town pump should be looked up and seen that it is in repair and some one appointed to store and look after it, so it will be ready should the occasion arise when it shall be needed
