STRYCHNINE IN FOOD

Wealthy Farmer and His Wife Are Poisoned.

An attempt to kill S. Delvert Smith, a wealthy and prominent farmer of Redbank township, Clarion county, Pa., may result fatally.

Smith while eating some breakfast food complained to his wife that it tasted "awful bitter." Thinking that he was mistaken Mrs. Smith said: "I ate some and it was all right." She then took a tablespoonful of the food that her husband had been eating and found that it had an unpleasant and bitter taste. The plate of breakfast food was then thrown out into the back yard.

Smith was soon in convulsions. A stomach pump saved his life. He is, however, paralyzed from the waist down. Mrs. Smith, who was also seized with convulsions, was treated in the same manner as her husband and is now on the road to recovery.

An investigation showed that the food contained strychnine.

Elizabeth Klimek Is Not Sure of Murder Suspect.

Nicola Fernor, alias D. Diemont, the Italian arrested on the Verona road near Pittsburg by secret service operatives, was partially identified as the man who murdered Florence Dove of North Braddock, by Elizabeth Klimek, the other victim of the assault, in the North Braddock police station.

There was no positive identification, the little girl declaring that he "looked like the man."

The suspect was taken before Elizabeth Klimek. The first time she saw him alone; the second he stood in line before her with eight other suspects. Each time she said the Italian looked like the man, but the uncertainty of her identification leaves doubt in the minds of some who are working on the case.

SICILIANS ARE AGAIN SHOCKED

Randazzo Populace in Panic When Earth Trembles

NO WORD OF CASUALTIES

In Last Friday's Disaster It Is Believed 200 Lives Were Lost But No Authentic Report Can Be Obtained.

Sicily has been shaken again by an earthquake, but the section visited this time was not the same as that affected last Friday night.

Randazzo, a town of 10,000, felt the latest shock most severely and there was a panic among the people. Whether there were any casualties is not known. Randazzo is located on the northern slope of Mt. Etna, more than fifteen miles distant from last Friday's quake.

All the news in regard to Friday's shocks north of Catania is still confused and incomplete. The telegraph lines have been partially repaired, but are working badly and are congested with government messages.

Moreover the survivors from the various villages and hamlets are still paralyzed with fear and are unable to describe the disaster.

The injured children will not allow the doctors to attend to their wounds. Others are clamoring helplessly for relief but will make no attempt to help themselves.

The great heat now prevailing makes matters worse and is the cause of increased trouble for those who are trying to succor the injured and homeless. Water is scarce as well as food and the rations distributed by the soldiers are not sufficient to go around.

The heat is hastening the decomposition of dead bodies and this will make it necessary for many of the soldiers to go to work at once in burying the dead and carrying out sanitary precautions.

The area of the zone devastated by Friday's earthquake is about two square miles. It is reported that the villages of Linera, Passopomo, Bongardi, Fossini and Zertati were practically obliterated.

Estimates as to the dead range as high as 200 with about 300 injured. Robert Y. Barkley, the United States vice consul at Catania, visited Linera and ascertained that there were no Americans among the sufferers by the earthquake.

It is announced that King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Elena will go to Sicily when they receive a report concerning the conditions there.
