

Continental Money.

For the purpose of providing pecuniary means to carry on the Revolutionary War, the Continental Congress issued bills in different sizes, the faith of the Confederate Colonies pledged for their redemption. The first issue was June 22, 1775, of $2,000,000, and from time to time other emissions were authorized, till the beginning of 1780, when $200,000,000 had been issued, and none redeemed. Mr. Loring, in his Field Book of the Revolution, gives a scale of the depreciation of the Continental money. In January, 1777, the paper currency was at five per cent. discount. In July it was twenty-five per cent. discount, and before the end of the year three dollars in paper would not command a silver dollar. In 1778 the paper currency continued to depreciate, so that in April four dollars in paper were equal to one in coin. In September, the ratio was at five to one, and at the close of the year was six and a half to one. In 1779 the depreciation rapidly continued. In February, the ratio was eight dollars and a half of paper to one of silver; in May, it was twelve to one, in September, eighteen to one, and before the close of the year a paper dollar was only worth four cents. In March, 1780, a paper dollar was worth three cents; in May, it was worth two cents; and in December, seventy-four dollars in paper was worth one dollar in silver. At this point the historical stops.

Thurlow Weed's Boyhood.

After over thirty years' editorship of the Albany Evening Journal, few readers need to be told who Thurlow Weed is. Of his boyhood an Albany correspondent of the Rochester Democrat writes: "It is more than forty years since a lad, way-worn and friendless, was trudging on the northern road, and seeking the way to Utica. He was a drummer by profession, and had just served out his time of enlistment, which had expired after the battle of Plattsburgh. While the boy was wearily plodding along, the regular stage coach passed him, and the driver, himself a youth, noticing him with sympathy, invited him to share his seat on the box. That poor drummer boy answered to the name of Thurlow Weed. He arrived at Utica, and there, while learning the trade of a printer, he became the fast friend of the kind and generous young man afterwards, when the printer had become a rich and influential man, he remembered the kindness shown him on the road, as evidence of the kind friendship ever existing between the two. Such was the history given us of the intimacy existing between Thurlow Weed and Theodore Faxon.

A distinguished duel occurred on the battle field of Fort Donelson, between one of Col. Birge's Sharpshooters and a crack shot inside the enemy's fortifications. Both fired accurately—but both concealed their persons as much as possible, and endeavored to deceive each other by putting their hats on their ramrods, and thrusting their coats from behind the fortifications or the trees. Whatever was exposed almost invariably received a bullet; but the two were so wary and skillful that it seemed they might fire until doomsday without danger to either. About four o'clock in the afternoon, however, the rebel, forgetful of prudence, thrust his head over the breastworks, thinking, no doubt, as his enemy had not fired for five minutes, that he might be dead. The movement was fatal. His head was not exposed five seconds; but in that brief period the sharp-shooter's ball passed into the rebel's brain, and stretched him out a corpse before the unfortunate fellow had been able to determine where his enemy was lurking, or by whose hand he was destined to fall.

PATENTED NOVEMBER 1, 1859.
