

WILL CATS KILL BABES?
This is an odd question to ask in these war times, but every body knows that unless the babes are attended to there would soon be neither wars nor rumors of wars. There is a popular superstition that a cat, if allowed the opportunity, will "suck the breath of a child," though how this is accomplished is not apparent. Cats are subjected to much suspicion, however, and while some pet and admire, others abhor and detest them. The Harrisburg Telegraph says:
"The other evening, at a residence only a few miles from this city, a cat was discovered sitting upon the chest of a little boy four years of age, her mouth placed close to the child's lips, and the cat evidently very much absorbed in the operation. An effort was made to drive the cat away, by speaking sharply to her. She paid no attention to this and was equally unimpaired by a series of blows with a stick. The cat was finally fairly pushed off the body of the child and off the bed. She was then pushed out of the room and down the stairs. She could not be driven in the usual way. She had a bewildered and wild look all the time, and exhibited a sign of ferocity by springing on the servant, who was forcing her down stairs. The cat was instantly killed as a warning to all cats not to be too intimate with sleeping children.—The little boy woke up during the noise which was made, and was naturally somewhat frightened. He did not seem to be injured.
"Though no harm was done, evil might have ensued had not the cat been discovered and removed. Her weight on the child's chest would necessarily reduce the quantity of air inspired, and tend to cause suffocation, while the child would inspire only carbonic acid gas, as taken from the mouth of the cat. The two causes might produce death even. They may have originated the superstition that a cat 'sucks the breath of a child.' The case is interesting and novel, and may serve the purpose of eliciting inquiry and putting some parents on their guard against the treacherous and stealthy pets with which their children play."

Two lawyers in Lowell, returning from court the other day, one said to the other: "I've a notion to join Rev. Mr. —'s church; been debating the matter for some time.—What do you think of it?" "Wouldn't it do?" "Well, why?" "Because, it would be a very great injury to the church."
